

Coeds to Receive Thanksgiving Hours

The AWS Senate voted last night to give all women students a one o'clock permission Wednesday, Nov. 22—the night before Thanksgiving—and a one o'clock traveling permission on Thanksgiving night.

The Senate also voted to allow coeds to wear bermudas in the dining hall for Saturday dinners. This is subject to the approval of the dean of women's office and the Food and Housing Service.

Nittany Protests Demonstration Halt at Game

Richard Reiss, spokesman for Nittany 34, last night protested an incident which occurred at the Syracuse football game where a group of students were stopped from carrying a "Thanksgiving vacation" demonstration sign in front of the west stands at Beaver field.

In a letter to the Collegian (see page 4) a majority of the residents of Nittany 34 spoke out against what they called "suppressing the voice of the student body."

A group of men from this residence hall took a 40-ft. sign to the game asking that the student body be granted a 3-day vacation at Thanksgiving.

According to Reiss, the students were given permission by the "head of all police at the game" to carry their poster along the outside track of the field during halftime.

"We wanted to go under the alumni section so the parents would realize what we were demonstrating against, but we were stopped on the way over," Reiss said.

Reiss described the person who stopped the Nittany group as "a University official" but could not identify him further.

The group was asked to hand over their matriculation cards and told that they could get them from "the dean" after the game.

The "official" refused to identify himself to the group of demonstrators.

While the Nittany men were talking with the anonymous official, a third party came onto the scene, according to Reiss. This man, who identified him-

Drive May Promote Better Mail Service

The Campus Mail Service will endeavor to undertake a campus-wide campaign to promote the use of more complete addresses on both incoming and outgoing mail within the next month, Wilbur F. Diehl, supervisor of mail and telephone services, said.

Diehl said that in April the service appealed to the faculty and staff for cooperation in correct addressing and since then has sought various means to improve the service.

"The appeal was not wholly successful for mechanical and manpower reasons," Diehl said. He added that the mail service has decided to undertake an education program designed to inform faculty and staff more fully of the reasons why complete addressing has become essential.

The growing volume of mail in State College prompted the town post office to ask the University last August to assume responsibility for the routing of incompletely addressed mail, Diehl said.

He said that the mail is delivered to the Campus Mail Service in bulk and it is the responsibility of that service to locate the person and deliver the mail to the proper building.

"The key to the whole problem is for every person at the (Continued on page eight)
