

Term Curtails Ag Activities—Althouse

The big question created by the term system is how much material students will absorb and retain when it is coming at them at a much faster pace, Paul M. Althouse, assistant director of resident agriculture instruction, said yesterday.

This question has not been answered yet, he said. The system has not been in operation long enough to answer this and many other problems.

Although this appears to be the major problem, the system so far has affected agricultural extra-curricular activities more than it has affected the scheduled courses, Althouse said.

He said the new system has not affected the faculty or the courses in the agricultural college any differently than it has the other colleges. All colleges on campus are having difficulties adjusting teaching methods and work loads to the term plan.

It is the extra-curricular activities which are being reconsidered at the present time, Althouse said.

Judging team activities are under intense study by the college. It is felt that crop and cattle judging events are valuable for a student, but Althouse said, the college does not want to schedule them and harm a student's academic studies.

In previous years judging teams have gone to such places as Chicago, Ill. and Norfolk, Va. to judge while classes were scheduled.

Under the new system, a student who misses two successive classes in a course is missing the equivalent of a week's work under the old semester calendar. As a result, he said, some judging trips have been scheduled for between terms.

Extensive field trips will also have to be cut down or eliminated, Althouse said. In the past, the College of Agriculture and the College of Mineral Industries have relied on field trips as a means of instruction more than any of the other colleges.

Attendance at clubs in the agriculture school has fallen off, Althouse said. Whether the drop is permanent or only temporary because this is the first term has not been discovered yet, he said.

Students, Althouse said, seemingly have had to make a choice between extra-curricular activities and keeping up with their work because of the switch to the term plan. So far, they have decided to study, he said.

Pitt Game Buses

North Halls Council will sponsor buses to the Penn State-University of Pittsburgh game. Round-trip tickets go on sale today for $4. The buses will supply transportation directly to Pitt Stadium and back to campus.

Tickets are available at the Hetzel Union desk and the Warnock post office. Ticket sale is scheduled to end Saturday. Students who wish to travel together are requested to purchase tickets at the same time.

The buses are tentatively scheduled to leave at 7:30 a.m. Saturday and will return immediately after the game.
