

Building Code Urged for Boro

By ROCHELLE MICHAELS

Although there are now borough regulations providing inspection for fire hazards, no town ordinance exists that permits a full-time officer to enforce the rules, Lawrence J. Perez, president of the State College Borough Council, said recently.

He explained that the fire marshal is granted the right to enter any building within borough jurisdiction and declare it "unfit for habitation," but it is economically impossible for him to effectively take advantage of that right since the position only pays $250 a year.

Perez, who is also assistant dean of the College of Engineering and Architecture, said he thought a letter written by students living downtown requesting an ordinance to establish a building inspector's position would have more weight than if any individual councilman brought it up at a borough council meeting.

Commenting on the possibility of such an ordinance being adopted by the council, Perez said he would "like to see it, but everything costs money and I don't know if this town is ready or not."

The biggest drawback, he explained, is that the whole town would have to be taxed to finance the protection of a few individuals. Many buildings are new and have been built to conform with fire safety regulations, he said.

All of the older ones, Perez continued, are no more than two stories high and it is possible for a person to get out safely in the event of a fire. "So far, we've been lucky in this town," Perez said. "It's a question of whether you want to gamble on a serious fire."

About six or seven years ago a commission was formed to study the possibility of a building code and inspection system. Perez said everyone on the commission felt it was not proper at that time to tax all the real estate for a few individuals in town.

"I would like to re-activate that commission," Perez said. He noted that there have been two serious fires in the last few years, although "we were lucky" and no loss of life was involved.

"I don't know the feeling of the new council," Perez said, "but I would love to see the ordinance go through. We are blighted with all those old buildings."

Student Handbook Forms

Applications for the business and editorial staffs of the Student Handbook are now available at the Hetzel Union desk. Applications must be returned by Friday, Marjorie Zelko, handbook editor, announced.

UCA to Hold Holiday Service

A special Thanksgiving Day service, sponsored by the University Christian Association, will be held at 11 a.m. tomorrow in the Helen Eakin Eisenhower Chapel.

Instead of a sermon, members of the UCA Student Council radio committee and members of the Meditation Chapel Choir will present "The Answers" by Darius Swann, a piece for verse choir. The Rev. Barrett Rudd, associate director of UCA, will be leader for the service.

A Community Protestant Service will be held at 10 a.m. tomorrow at the State College Presbyterian Church. The Rev. John Whitney rector of St. Andrew's Episcopal Church will speak on "Living Thanksgiving."

The Wesley Foundation will sponsor a Thanksgiving breakfast and worship service at 8 a.m. tomorrow. George Boone, senior in psychology from Philadelphia, will be the leader of worship.

A pre-Thanksgiving dance will be held at the Hillel Foundation from 9 to 12 tonight.
