Very Cold Weather to Continue; Light Snow Possible Tomorrow

March came in like a roaring and the temperature failed to climb out of the middle 20's during the afternoon.

Clear skies and light winds — two conditions that favor rapid cooling — prevailed last night, and the mercury fell rapidly after sunset.

A low of 6 or 7 degrees was predicted for this morning. Sunny, but cold weather is indicated for today. A high of 26 degrees is expected.

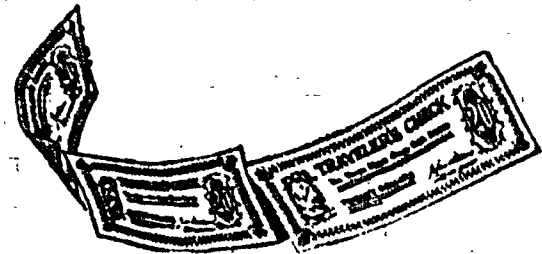

Tonight should be partly cloudy and cold with a low of 12 degrees.

Mostly cloudy skies and cold weather are expected tomorrow and light snow is likely. The high temperature will be about 28 degrees.

Temperatures across the state responded actively to the invasion of the arctic air, and readings early yesterday ranged from near zero in the northwestern counties of the state to the teens in the central sections.

A low of 12 degrees was observed at the University weather station.

The sun was no match for brisk northwesterly winds yesterday
