

Seniors May Get Grad Credits In Military Intelligence Reserves

Senior men may earn credits toward a master's degree while fulfilling their military obligation by serving in the Military Intelligence Reserves, the Department of the Army announced recently. The Army is offering to qualified individuals instruction in Russian, Polish, Czech or a language of their choice as part of this reserve program. The credits accumulated during the instruction may be used toward a master's degree at most colleges and universities, the Army announcement said.

After completing basic training and passing the required intelligence tests, reservists will be enrolled at the U.S. Army Language School at Monterey, Calif., for 47 weeks.

After graduation from the language school, they will be separated from active duty and assigned to the 396th Military Intelligence Security Company, a Harrisburg unit in the organized reserves.

Their military service will then consist of attending a two-hour meeting once a week and 15 days summer training at Fort Meade, Md., once a year.

To qualify for the military intelligence reserves, a person must be 21 years old, a senior in college or recipient of a bachelor's degree before enrollment in the program. An applicant must also be in good physical condition and able to complete an intelligence test satisfactorily.

Further information about the program may be obtained by writing Maj. Richard P. Sneider, 266 S. Royal St., York, Pa.
