

MODERN CLASSROOM: This main classroom building on the 69-acre Altoona Campus is one of the several new buildings which the community helped finance by fund drives. The building houses classrooms, a library, laboratories, an auditorium, a dispensary and offices. It is named after E. Raymond Smith who owned much of the land on which the center was built.

Commonwealth Campuses

Park Converted to Campus

By DOROTHY DRASHER

(This is the fourth in a series of articles concerning the University's 13 commonwealth campuses. Today's article features the Altoona campus.)

The 69-acre Altoona campus, located in a partially wooded section of the city, once served as the center of social life on Sunday afternoons when it was known as the Ivsyde Amusement Park.

In 1946, seven years after classes were started in an old school building in another part of town, the amusement park was purchased and began its history as an educational institution.

The spacious park was purchased with $50,000 raised in a local campaign through personal subscription and a house to house canvass in the area.

THE ALTOONA CAMPUS was the fourth center to be established by the University and now has the second largest enrollment with 700 full time students. About 60 per cent of these students are from the Altoona area.

The campus offers both baccalaureate and associate degree curriculums. Although it is coeducational, the men outnumber the women 5 to 1.

The building shown in the accompanying photograph is one of several recently completed. It was built mostly with funds solicited in local drives.

ALTHOUGH ONE-THIRD of the students are enrolled in the associate degree programs—drafting and design technology and electrical engineering—there is an increasing emphasis toward the liberal arts at the campus, Dr. Robert E. Eiche, director, said in a recent television interview.

The campus administrators are trying to achieve a balance between the technical programs and the arts, he said. Evidence of this trend is shown by the recent effort to get funds for building residence halls on the campus.

Eiche said this would encourage students from surrounding counties to enroll at the campus. Many of these students would probably be women and would enroll in more of the non-technical courses, he said.

Eiche predicted that the University would probably reach a maximum enrollment of 25,000 in 1966 at the University Park campus and further expansion of the University would most likely occur at the campuses and centers.

In looking forward to this, it is wise to plan balanced growth in technical and non-technical programs at the campuses in the next few years, Eiche said.

East Halls AWS Council Will Sponsor JR Tea

The East Halls AWS Council has decided to sponsor a junior resident tea within the next few weeks.

The purpose of the tea, which will be held in the Delta Phi Epsilon sorority suite, is to promote interest in AWS.

Junior Residents in East Halls for both this year and next year will be invited to an informal discussion of the relations of AWS to women students, Marcia Chermosky, president of the area council, said.

Kathleen Rozamus, freshman in education from Alexandria, Va., will head the committee for the tea.
