Open Bidding Closed by Panhel

The Panhellenic Council voted open bidding until the end of the last night to close the period of open bidding for all sororities except Delta Sigma Theta, Alpha Kappa Alpha and Sigma Sigma Sigma who previously were granted permission to hold open bidding until the end of the year.

Pamela Chadwick, Panhel president, said that no girls have been ribboned in the past few weeks of open bidding. The open bidding period has been in effect since the close of formal rush in January.

The three sororities still eligible have been granted permission to issue bids until the end of the year because they have not reached a membership of 35, Miss Chadwick said. Panhel voted earlier this year that sororities with a membership below 35 would be allowed to continue

THE COUNCIL also discussed revisions in its constitution at its meeting last night. Judy Walko, parliamentarian, said that the revised constitution now groups together articles which refer to the same topic.

In the present constitution, she said, regulations are set forth in the main body and then elaborated on in the by-laws.

The proposed constitution will be voted on at the next meeting. In other business, Miss Chadwick, reporting on judicial proceedings, said that 13 sororities exceeded the rush budget of $75. Each group reported its offense, she added.

MISS CHADWICK said that there will be no formal hearing or official action unless the offense is repeated in forthcoming rush periods.

IS QUEEN ELIZABETH WORTH HER KEEP?

The Queen costs British taxpayers more than $1,000,000 a year. A few critics gripe. Yet most of her subjects are happy to foot the bill. In this week's Post, an English writer tells why the British dote on the royal family. How the throne nearly tottered 8 years ago. And why the public did not want Princess Margaret's husband raised to the peerage.
