Construction Moves in 'Full Gear,' Weigand Predicts Completion Date

By STEVE CIMBALA
 Spring is bursting out all over—and so is new construction at the University. In evaluating the current construction picture, Walter H. Wiegand, director of physical plant, noted that the Arts and Humanities building project is now moving in full gear. He said that two of the project's principal phases, renovation of Carnegie and conversion of the Stock Judging Pavilion, are scheduled for completion by Dec. 5. Wiegand said that the Stock Judging Pavilion is being converted into a theater for use by the theatre arts department and the Penn State Players. The theatre has a planned seating capacity of 350. In outlining plans for the theatre, Wiegand said that the stage will be located in the center of the arena-shaped building. One end of the building will be used for scenery preparation, while the other end will serve as the lobby, he said. Seating areas will be located along the sides of the structure, and, according to present plans, the entrance will be located slightly above the last row of seats. In addition to the Arts and Humanities project, Wiegand said that preliminary plans for the construction of these five new buildings at the University have been approved by the Board of Trustees: ●An Earth Sciences Building, to be located at the site of the present Continuing Education building. Construction on this building is scheduled to begin March 1963, with the completion date set for March 1965. ●An addition to Recreation Hall. Construction is scheduled to begin not later than March 1963, with the completion date unestablished. ●A conference Center, to be located on the northwest corner (Continued on page eight)
