Prof Views Soviet Youth

By PENNY WATSON

The attitude of Soviet youth toward Americans as individuals is "overwhelmingly friendly," but their attitude toward the United States government is one of suspicion and fear, Ralph T. Fisher, Jr., professor of history at the University of Illinois, said Monday night.

Fisher, who is also director of the Center for Russian Language and Area Studies, said young people of the Soviet Union show a lack of ill feeling toward Americans and sometimes even exaggerate their good qualities.

YOUNG PEOPLE of the Soviet Union can be friendly toward the American people as individuals and suspicious of the American government because they regard the people and government as being separate, Fisher said. Suspicion of the American government is also a reflection of effective Soviet propaganda against the United States, he said.

The attitude of Soviet youths toward their own regime is marked by discontent, Fisher said.

"Discontent in the Soviet system is relatively great compared with the United States, England, France or some of the more prosperous countries of the world," he said. "It is, however, less than it was 10 or 20 years ago."

The typical Soviet youth falls short of the "eager robot" model set up by Komsomol, the official Soviet youth organization, Fisher said. His book "Pattern for Soviet Youth" is a study of the Komsomol from the time of its foundation up to the mid 1950s.

FISHER SAID that Soviet young people are like young Americans in some respects. In both countries there is a problem with the apathy of the youth, he said. Indifference to military service is as great in the Soviet Union as it is in the United States, he said, but is not as readily expressed. Soviet young people are also strongly patriotic, Fisher said.

They are sensitive about comparisons between the Soviet Union and other countries, he explained, and "are eager to show only the best."

The ambition of Soviet youth is stronger than that of American youth, Fisher said, because of the more competitive Soviet educational system.

Fisher also said there is a lack of desire for world domination among young people of the USSR, although little chance for political revolution or a slack in economic development lies with the younger generation.

"ANY TENDENCIES toward political democracy in the Soviet Union would be likely to develop very slowly," he said.

Concert Blue Band Will Present Annual Program on Library Steps

Music will resound from the Mall at 3 p.m. Sunday when the Penn State Concert Blue Band gives its annual concert on the steps of Pattee Library.

James W. Dunlop, professor of music education, will conduct the band. Assisting him will be Andrew Christina, graduate student in music education from Fredonia, N.Y.

Playing cornet solos in Robert Binge's "Cornet Carillon" will be Christine Burkholder, sophomore in arts and letters from Mt. Union, Paul Nagle, junior in music education from Altoona, Marshall Spayde, senior in music education from Centre Hall, and Michael Stacey, sophomore in agriculture and biological science from Oxon Hill, Md.

The band will also play "The Blue and the Grey" by Clare Grundman and Clifton Williams' "Concertino for Percussion." Performing solos in the Williams' composition will be Evelyn Gaston, senior in physical education from Gettysburg, on the snare drum; John Haberlen, senior in music education from West Alexander, on the timpany and James Harberger, junior in engineering sciences from Pottstown, on the bass drum.

Also playing solos in this number will be Harry Owens, graduate student in music education from Forty Fort, on the tangleable tom-toms; Joseph Jumpeter, senior in chemical engineering from McAdoo, on the bells and chimes and Alfred Schoenbeck, special student from State College, on the cymbals.

"SIDE KICKS" by Harry Simeone will feature nine trombonists. Performing in this number will be Dave Fluck, freshman in education from Quakertown; Fred Good, sophomore in business administration from New Holland; Alan Lupfer, senior in secondary education from Harrisburg; and Maxwell Mascia, sophomore in metallurgy from St. Marys.

Also, Dennis Rittenhouse, freshman in electrical technology; William Shenk, graduate student in meteorology from Arlington, Va.; Ray Zeigler, junior in music education from Spring Mills; and Florie De Matteis from Altoona.

Army Proposes 2-Year ROTC For Jrs., Srs.

A two-year Reserve Officers Training Corps program has been recommended to the Department of Defense by the Army, according to the Armed Forces Press Service.

The proposed plan would provide instruction during the junior and senior college years with two summer camp sessions augmenting the on-campus study.

Subjects eliminated from the on-campus phases of the ROTC program, such as individual weapons and marksmanship, map reading and organization of the Army would be included in a four-week basic training camp. Other subjects which might be taught at this camp include physical training and a School of the Soldier.

The proposed four-week camp would precede the junior year. An eight-week advanced training camp would be held between the junior and senior years.

The proposed plan would not entirely eliminate the current program. The Army said that those institutions desiring to conduct a four-year program would be authorized to continue on a required or an elective basis.

Cunningham to Replace Retiring M.E. Head

Richard G. Cunningham, professor of mechanical engineering, has been named head of the Department of Mechanical Engineering, Aug. 1.

He will succeed Maurice S. Gjesdahl, who will retire as professor emeritus of mechanical engineering on Aug. 1 after 33 years on the faculty.

Walker Will Host Dinner to Honor Students With 4.0 Winter Averages

President Eric A. Walker will honor 169 of the students who achieved 4.0 averages for winter term courses at a reception and dinner this evening in the Hetzel Union ballroom.

Arthur H. Waynick, head of the Department of Electrical Engineering, will deliver the principal address, with remarks also scheduled by Walker.

The students will be entertained after the dinner by the Varsity Quartet, directed by Frank Gullo, associate professor of music.

The reception will begin at 6 and precede the dinner.

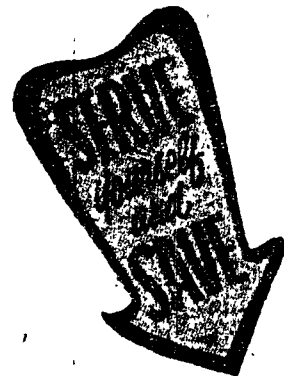

A total of 252 students made 4.0 averages, but only 169 accepted their invitations.

Folklorists Introduce Magazine

The first issue of "Folkways lessor of English, spotlighting his life as a collector of folk material. Monthly," a magazine devoted to folklore and songs, went on sale Monday, John Burrison, editor, said recently.

"This is a monthly journal of folklife including songs, instrumental music, beliefs, sayings, speeches, customs and art," Burrison said.

Designed to meet the interests of students and State College folk-lore enthusiasts, the first issue features biographical articles about Samuel P. Baynard, pro-
