The school year of 1961-62 is almost over, but its memories will linger long for many. There were events that will never again be duplicated.

For freshmen, Sept. 17 was the beginning. However, three days earlier the first group of Peace Corps trainees at the University had been graduated.

On Monday, Sept. 18, the whole world was shocked when it received word that U.N. Secretary-General Dag Hammarskjold had been killed in an airplane crash while on a peace mission to the Congo.

Following this start, the fall term settled down with two weeks of frosh customs and the usual fuss over the weekend football games. There were demonstrations for a Thanksgiving vacation which had been eliminated as the University shifted to the 10-week term system.

The term passed quickly and drew to a close as Albert Diem resigned as vice president of business administration and the SGA changed its name to USG. Sports-wise, the football team beat Pitt and found itself in the Gator Bowl.

A victory over Georgia Tech at Jacksonville set the stage for the winter term. Fraternity and sorority kicked off the activities with formal rush.

Two major events occurred in late January.

Dennis Foianini was given a vote of confidence in campus-wide elections, and a tragedy took place near Osceola Mills where two youngsters were killed in an abandoned clay mine. The search for their bodies took nearly two weeks.

The month of February was quiet on the campus level. Nationally Feb. 20 was the day that John H. Glenn Jr. rocketed around the world three times to advance the U.S. in the space race.

A 22-inch snowfall and the Eastern Intercollegiate Wrestling Tournament closed out the winter term. The snow was the heaviest in 20 years.

A forum on the communist challenge began the spring term. A few days later, on April 10, Vice President Lyndon B. Johnson spoke at the concluding ceremonies of the Career Day sponsored by the College of Business Administration.

April came to a close with student elections which saw Dean Wharton take the USG president's chair, and the University party making a clean sweep.

The past month has seen the success of the annual Spring Week Carnival and the crowning of Miss Penn State, Linda Krumboldt.

What is left? For the undergraduates there are finals. For the seniors there are finals, also, but the big event of the year—graduation—is June 9.

NEW GYMNASTIC RECORD SET: Greg Weiss concluded the home gymnastic schedule in late February with a performance that went into the record books. His 298 score on the parallel bars (insert shows scores) broke his own record of 293.

NEW USG PRESIDENT: Dean Wharton, running on the University ticket, led his party to a clean sweep in the spring elections. Morris Baker was elected vice president and Margo Lewis was elected secretary-treasurer of USG.
