Goldwater Advocates Higher Moral Aims

By DONNAN BEESON

MT. JOY—To be an American is to have more food and a lot of gadgets, Sen. Barry Goldwater, R-Ariz., said recently in a speech to the annual meeting of the Donegal Historical Society.

If we don't believe in anything immaterial, he said, there is no difference between the United States and Russia and we might as well join the communists in their quest for a higher standard of living.

"But I don't believe a standard of living is worth dying for."

GOLDWATER also said that he does not think the U.S. had proved to anybody that this country has something worth working for and that it is time to show the people of the world the "high dignity of man." To accomplish this, the senator advocated the establishment of moral aims, as opposed to material ones.

These would include freedom, order, justice and charity, all emanating from the wisdom displayed by our ancestors at the time the new world was settled, he said.

"We are filled with riches for the future, and we all have hearts and consciences; if we are men, we will stand firm. We will die rather than submit to the collective anthill, which is strictly material."

SPEAKING OF his hope for this accomplishment, Goldwater said he thought the spirit of patriotism necessary was far more alive today than ever and that it was part of many people's lives.

"We spend too much time in Congress worrying about 4 or 5 per cent of the population and let the others go by the way. Let the great bulk of Americans who are never heard from speak out."

Further, he said, "We will have to make sacrifices to do this. We will not need experts or the Peace Corps or anything else. We want to be free and we will show the beacon of our freedom."

THE SOCIETY to which Goldwater spoke is an organization formed more than 50 years ago which, as the Arizona Republican advocated in his speech, has as one of its goals the pursuit of spiritual value from the past history of the United States.

Art Prof Receives Emeritus Position

Andrew W. Case, professor of art who retired earlier this week, has been honored with the title of professor emeritus of art by the Board of Trustees.

Case served from 1954 to 1958 as the chairman of the Division of Fine and Applied Arts and in 1956 was acting head of the Department of Art. He has served as art advisor to La Vie, the University yearbook, from 1927 to the present.

Many of the thousands of students who have enrolled in his classes are exhibiting their works today. Among them is Oliver Smith, one of the top stage designers on Broadway. Most of Case's teaching has been in the field of water color, the subject for which he is best known. He also has taught oil painting, commercial art, figure drawing and anatomy.
