

Hallock Appointed Architecture Head

Philip F. Hallock, professor of architecture, has been named acting head of the Department of Architecture.

He will succeed Milton S. Osborne, who retired with emeritus rank on June 30. The appointment was approved at the weekend meeting of the Executive Committee of the Board of Trustees, President Eric A. Walker said Monday.

HALLOCK WILL also continue teaching architectural design and the professional practice of architecture, Walker said.

Hallock was named to the staff in 1947 as a part-time instructor, a year after he had established an office to practice architecture.

in State College. He was named assistant professor in 1947, associate professor two years later and professor in 1953.

A native of Wellsboro, Hallock was graduated from the University in 1935 and received the master of science degree in architecture in 1937.

His professional experience was developed in engineering and construction in Lancaster with the civil engineering firm of John H. Wickersham. Hallock was later responsible for design and project coordination in the special fields of hospital and industrial complexes at the Chicago architectural office of Schmidt, Garden and Erickson. Hallock began his private practice of architecture in 1940, only to have it terminated by the war a year later. During this period he developed a system of radiant heating design for residential buildings which was published in the December, 1943 issue of "Pencil Points" (now "Progressive Architecture"). He is the author of other articles and illustrations for professional journals and books. He has also designed a wide variety of buildings in Illinois, Ohio, New York and Pennsylvania.

During World War II, Hallock served in the Aleutian area as a naval reserve lieutenant in a photographic intelligence unit and was an instructor in photographic interpretation at the Anacostia Naval Air Station in Washington, D.C.

HE HAS been active in committee work in the American Institute of Architects, the Pennsylvania Society of Architects and was president of the Central Pennsylvania Chapter in 1956. Hallock has been a member of the State College Borough Council since 1956. He is also a member of the Borough Authority board, State College Area Chamber of Commerce and is vice president of the University Club.

Smith Succeeds Moyer As Secondary Ed Head

Herbert A. Smith, professor of education and director of the Bureau of Educational Research and Service at the University of Kansas, has been named professor of secondary education and head of the Department of Secondary Education at the University, effective immediately.

HE WILL succeed James H. Moyer, who is retiring with emeritus rank after serving more than 25 years on the faculty and heading the Department of Secondary Education since it was established in 1959.

Smith is a graduate of the University of Nebraska, where he received his bachelor of science degree in mathematics and science, his master of arts with a major in secondary education and the doctor of philosophy degree.

He began his career as a science teacher, then principal and later superintendent of schools, serving in Burr, Wayne and West Point, Neb.

Following service as a commissioned officer in the U.S. Navy during World War II, he was named to the faculty of the University of Nebraska where he was associate professor of secondary education and supervisor of science when he resigned in 1953 to go to the University of Kansas.

Smith was on leave in 1959-60 to serve as chief of the Science, Mathematics and Modern Foreign Languages Section of the National Defense Education Act program in Washington, D.C.

IN 1960-61, he was president of the National Association for Research in Science Teaching, and in 1958-59, served as president of the National Science Teachers Association. He has also been serving as chairman of the Review Committee of the section on Science Education in the Encyclopedia of Educational Research.

Landscape Architecture Curriculum Receives Five-Year Accreditation

The American Society of Landscape Architects has extended for another five years the accreditation of the curriculum in landscape architecture.

The extension was an unexpected bonus of the University's self-evaluation program. A member of the five-man group called in to evaluate the curriculum also serves on the education committee of the American Society of Landscape Architects.

THIS COMMITTEE accredits curricula for the society. On the basis of the evaluating committee's report, the full committee voted to extend the accreditation without further examination.

Walter L. Chambers of the University of Michigan, who was a member of the evaluation committee of the University as well as chairman of the committee on education of the society, explained the basis of the reaccreditation in a letter to President Eric A. Walker.

"The members of the Committee on Education agree with me that the program in landscape architecture at your institution is outstanding," Chambers wrote. "They, therefore, suggest that this visitation serve as an official reevaluation of your program in landscape architecture.

"We feel that the program has received minute inspection and therefore will save your institution and us a considerable amount of money if we may substitute this visit for an official one, which is due immediately."

Walker said that Chambers and other members of the committee had been selected on the basis of their leadership in the field, and it was a coincidence that Chambers is chairman of the Committee on Education of the Society of Landscape Architects.

The landscape architecture curriculum is in the College of Agriculture.

Prize Photos On Exhibition At Library

By LINDA SMETS
Going on exhibit this week in the main lobby of Pattee Library are a group of prize newspaper and magazine photographs. The photographs are a collection of the best in press photography in the largest competition for photojournalism in the world.

The 19th annual contest was jointly sponsored by the National Press Photographers Association, World Book Encyclopedia and the University of Missouri School of Journalism. A screening committee and three separate juries made the selections in 18 categories from among 5,878 entries by 524 photographers.

The exhibit is scheduled to continue through August.

On the second floor of the library is an exhibit of the letters of James Buchanan, the only Pennsylvanian to become President.

The letters are from the Pennsylvania Historical Collections and are supplemented by materials loaned by Philip S. Klein, professor of American history and author of a new biography of Buchanan.

Also on exhibit in the library is the latest published work of James Dugan, '37, editor of Froth while attending the University.

Oil Paintings by 28 Students Exhibited in Temporary Building

An exhibition of oil paintings by 28 students went on display in 105 Temporary Building yesterday.

The major portion of the exhibiting students are taking the introductory painting course and this will be their initial public exhibition. However, works of some advanced students with prior exhibition credits will also be included in the show.

George Pappas, associate professor of art and art education, is teaching the introductory painting course for the first time this summer. He is also working with the advanced students who will be exhibiting.

Among the advanced students are William Farrell, instructor in art at Purdue University, and George Ferguson, assistant professor of art at Edinboro State College.

The paintings present a variety of subjects such as still life, figures and landscape.

"The introductory painting course is primarily exploratory," Pappas said. "Each student is encouraged to discover and pursue an individual approach to painting that is representative of the historical epoch in which we live."

"Although a majority of the paintings are abstract in nature, they are related in their inception or structure to the human element," Pappas said.

The students framed their own works and participated in the hanging of the exhibition. The exhibit will be open from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Mondays through Fridays until Aug. 17.
