

Candidates Differ on Education Issue

HARRISBURG (AP) — Gubernatorial candidates Richardson Dilworth and William W. Scranton continued their campaigns yesterday by hammering at education issues.

The candidates appeared together yesterday before the Governor's Bipartisan Committee of 100 for Better Education, a group formed early this year around the nucleus of the 1960-61 Governor's Committee on Education.

DEMOCRAT DILWORTH gave the state's controversial school reorganization act his firm endorsement and declared:

"I am for the reorganization law as it is written. I will not monkey with it and if anyone tries to monkey with it, I will veto such effort."

The 1961 act would reduce the existing 2,100 school districts to approximately 400.

Republican candidate Scranton told the committee he favored revision of the law to "fairly and squarely" overcome objections to it.

Scranton said he favored the plan in substance but contended that Gov. David L. Lawrence's administration has "refused to come to grips" with problems raised by the 1961 statute.

Dilworth also told the audience of educators that if elected, he would urge the state to pay half of the cost of education. He also urged that Penn. State be designated as the state university.

"I don't mean others in the state will not be given aid, but it is essential Penn State be made a state university," he added.

THE JOINT appearance disclosed many areas of agreement between the two-candidates. Both agreed for example that a scholarship program should be set up. Dilworth proposed scholarships for at least 5 per cent of the high school graduates each year plus low-interest loans for the needy qualified graduate.

Yemen Regime Considered at War

The United Arab Republic's Middle East News Agency yesterday quoted Yemen's vice premier Abdel Rahman El Beidany as announcing that Yemen considers itself at war with Saudi Arabia.

The announcement came shortly after the UAR government pledged all its strength to defend against any attack on the two-week-old revolutionary regime in Yemen. The news agency did not make it clear whether the vice premier was speaking personally or representing official policy of the Yemen regime. The UAR pledge came after the country's premier mentioned what he termed present Saudi Arabian - Jordanian aggression on Yemen's frontiers.
