

Hansman Gives Job Hunting Hints to Coeds

The two most important things to remember when job hunting are to have a helpful attitude and be willing to work hard. Mrs. Ingely Hansman, assistant director of the Harvard-Radcliffe program in business administration, said last night.

In a talk to members of women's hat societies and Mortar Board, she said one of the first steps is to make a complete but short biography which could be included in letters of application. Learning about the facilities of the college placement service is important too, she said. Interviews should be scheduled both for the experience and to discover job opportunities.

In approaching the problem of finding a job immediately after college, a graduate should not expect to do something "important" right away, she said. He should be willing to work in an organization with the idea of learning about it and allowing the employer time to learn about him, Miss Hansman said.

Student Aid Office Offers Applications For Jobs During Christmas Recess

Jobs are available for both in and out of state students. Students should make early inquiries to increase their chances of obtaining a better job. Applications will be forwarded by the Bellefonte office of the Pennsylvania State Employment Service to the employment office in the area where the student will live during the semester break.
