

NSA Education Conference Will Begin Tomorrow

The organization of the Aims of Education Conference, scheduled to begin tomorrow night, centers around nine seminars which will consider educational subjects of continuing importance. Allison Woodall, National Student Association coordinator, said yesterday.

THE MAJOR ADDRESS will be delivered at a banquet at 6 Saturday evening by Martin McLaughlin, special assistant for educational and cultural affairs with the Department of State.

McLaughlin will consider the subject "Will the American University Meet the Challenge of the Growing Educational Community?"

Educators from colleges in the Pennsylvania-West Virginia region of NSA, which is sponsoring the conference, will serve as moderators for the seminars.

Mary Beth Shaub, regional NSA chairman and a student at Bryn Mawr, has been responsible for over-all organization.

The Undergraduate Student

Government is the host. Miss Woodall and the coordinating committee have been in charge of local arrangements.

The conference begins at 8 tomorrow night with an address entitled "Is There a Future for Student Government?" Miss Woodall said the speaker would represent NSA and his name will be announced later.

TIM MANNING, national affairs vice-president, will be attending the conference as moderator of a seminar on student government contributions to university development.

The conference will continue through noon Sunday. Conference reports will be prepared on the seminar level to report proceedings.
