

Staff Clears Walks Before Snow Ends

The "white stuff" started falling before one o'clock Wednesday afternoon. By the time it ended some eight hours later, the University's Landscape Maintenance Department had already cleared most of the "streets, parking lots and sidewalks so they were at least passable."

An estimated four to six inches of snow fell yesterday.

Lewis E. Barr, head of the department, said his crews have been on a snow alert since the middle of last fall. And so, when the snow fell Wednesday, they were prepared to cope with it, he said.

As soon as it began snowing, he said, his men started the snow removal operation by getting the snow plows and salting and cinder machines out of storage.

One factor which is important in deciding how the removal operation is to be implemented is the type of snow, Barr said. Snow may be wet, feathery, damp or glazed with ice, he said.

The snow that fell was glazed with ice so the air brooms, which are used for blowing leaves and feathery snow off pavements, couldn't be used, he explained. Instead, small hand plows and some truck plows were used.

The only difficulty lay with automobiles parked in 14 lots designated "no parking from 2 a.m. to 6 p.m." These cars hindered an efficient job of cleaning the parking areas, Barr said.
