

8 Attend College Debate Tourney

Eight members of the men's debating team are representing the University in an intercollegiate debate tournament at William and Mary College, Williamsburg, Va. The contest began yesterday and will last until Sunday.

Eighteen colleges and universities from the Middle Atlantic states, including some from as far south as South Carolina, are debating the topic: "Resolved, that the non-communist nations of the world should establish an economic community."

John Sebastian (11th-mineral economics-Duquesne), manager of the team, and Mark Schwarz (8th-liberal arts-Reading) will take the affirmative view for Penn State.

On the negative side are Edgar Snyder (11th-arts and letters-Pittsburgh) and Charles Brewer (8th-arts and letters-State College). Each side debates the opposing team of every other college.

The William and Mary trip includes a tour of the historic sites of colonial Williamsburg.

There are approximately 30 members on the men's debating team. This total includes 15 varsity debaters and 15 novices. Eight varsity debaters will take part in each of the debating trips.

The women's debating team participated in a three-round debate with the newly formed Pottsville campus men's debating team last Saturday.

DOC Council President

Michael Franchell (2nd-education-Munnsville, N.Y.) was recently elected president of the Division of Counseling student council. Philip Krause (2nd-counseling-Landenberg) will serve as vice-president and Frances Bell (2nd-counseling-Beaver Falls) was elected secretary-treasurer.

Inter-Faith Dating Issues Discussed

The key issue in inter-faith dating is inter-faith marriage, The Rev. Donald McIlvrde, residence halls religious staff, said.

"Although these marriages occur, no one encourages them," he said.

The Rev. Mr. McIlvrde spoke on the problem of inter-faith dating as the first part of a discussion sponsored by the Pollock AWS religious affairs committee.

A panel of students, representing the three major faiths in the United States, started the student participation which was continued with questions from the floor. The students were Nancy Hartman (11th-home economics-Danville), Marie Rineman (5th-German-Hanover) and Doni Teitelbaum (11th-arts and letters-Englewood, N.J.)

The problems of inter-faith marriages include the faith itself and the complication of a faith for the children, the Rev. Mr. McIlvrde said.

Discussing the faith, he listed the differences in philosophies of life, forms of worship, observances such as holidays or eating and drinking and attitudes toward such matters as family planning.

Children can complicate any marriage, he said, but the parents in an inter-faith marriage must ask themselves whether they wish to foist off their compromise on the child.

Such compromises may be for one parent only to supervise the religious upbringing of the child, to divide the family religiously or for the parents to withdraw and allow the child to make his own decision, he said.
