HUB Will Organize Own 'NTL'

The campus will have its own leadership program, sponsored by the Hetzel Union Public Relations Committee, beginning Jan. 16, 1964, Joseph Buchanan, program chairman announced last night.

John K. Brillhart, associate professor of speech, John Timmis, speech instructor, and Jerome E. Singer and Francis Whaley, associate professors of psychology, will be the guest speakers for the program.

The program, which will cost $1 per student, will consist of seven sessions, each including a lecture, a question and answer period and a workshop.

Brillhart, who is also a trainer for the National Training Laboratories leadership program, to be held on campus Dec. 13 - 15, said the HUB program will complement the NTL program.

"The program is designed to expose the student to the elements of leadership and thus provide him with the self-assurance necessary to become an effective leader," Buchanan said.

All students may apply and applications are now available at the HUB desk. They must be returned by Dec. 2.

The program differs from the NTL program because it is less expensive, is organized differently and will be done entirely by people on campus.

Two hundred students will be selected and these selections will be announced before winter term, Buchanan said. He said the program will be compulsory for HUB committee members who will not have to pay the enrollment fee.

In addition, students who have been selected for the NTL program will automatically be enrolled, he said.

THREE MEMBERS of the Operating Engineers Union interrupt their picketing of non-union employer Paul E. Hickes' construction site at Pond Laboratory long enough to discuss their activities with a Collegian reporter.

Hickes Is Target

Engineers Union Pickets at Pond

Three members of the Operating Engineers Union Local 66 of Pittsburgh picketed non-union contractor Paul E. Hickes yesterday at the University's Pond Laboratory construction site.

Previously, Hickes had been picketed against at Pond and the Altoona Campus by members of the Carpenters District Council, AFL-CIO of Pittsburgh. Stanley H. Campbell, vice president for business, said yesterday that "as far as I know, there has been no rough stuff" at the Pond site.

However, he added, the pickets did stop one cement truck approaching Pond and spoke to the driver, who subsequently turned away from the site.

Informational Picket

The three men said they are staging an "informational picket," which should last until work at Pond stops or until the laboratory's addition is completed. A union spokesman emphasized that there is no connection between the picketing on this campus and that at the Altoona Campus, other than the union principle involved.

Non-union Employer

An informational picket is designed to advertise the fact that Hickes is a non-union employer, he explained. An organizational picket protests the use of non-union labor when the employees themselves want to join the union.

Although the Carpenters Union has petitioned the National Labor Relations Board to conduct an election among Hickes' non-union workers, the petition was unable to show that at least 30 per cent of Hickes' men favored such an election.

Blues Singer

Judy Roderick, who appeared at the Philadelphia Folk Festival, was acclaimed as the finest white female blues singer around.

Miss Roderick's voice ranges from the powerfully suggestive to the plaintive cry of loneliness, according to the true feeling of the song.

Logan English sings in a personal variant of country style with an authentic ring. A native of Kentucky who grew up with folk music, he features authentic yodelling in his repertoire.

Tickets for the Hootenanny are still on sale at the booth on the ground floor of the HUB, the Music Mart and the HUB desk. Cost for members of the Folklore Society is $1.00; cost for non-members is $1.50. Several doorprizes including a stereo phonograph and five long-play record albums will be awarded. These have been donated by the Music Mart.

Scranton 'Hopeful' for Appropriations Bill OK

Scranton Answers USG Letter

Gov. William W. Scranton promised to call a special meeting of the legislature to take action on non-preferred state appropriations if State Democrats assure that the necessary votes for passage will be provided.

"If I receive such assurances, I shall immediately call a special session of the legislature to deal with this subject," Scranton promised.

The governor added: "The leaders of the minority party stated that they would take this question before their caucus and would report back to me within a few days."

Answers Jackson

Scranton's statement appeared in a letter written to Undergraduate Student Government President George Jackson, in response to a request made by USG urging the governor to call a special session of the legislature.

Scranton emphasized that he had repeatedly urged the passage of the non-preferred appropriations, but that the Democrats declined to supply the necessary two-thirds majority.

'Not Undeserved'

"The members of the Democratic party have not opposed the appropriation for Penn State on the ground that this appropriation is not needed or deserved," Scranton stressed.

He added that Democratic party has been somewhat vague about the reasons for opposing the appropriation, but that it is generally understood that they wish to use it to secure a "deal" on reapportionment of the State Legislature.

Otis B. Morse, Democratic state committee chairman, also responded to Jackson's letter stating that it was the responsibility of the governor alone to call the special session at which non-preferred appropriations could be considered.

Morse criticized Scranton stating that "he has shown a reckless disregard, not only for The Pennsylvania State University, but for hospitals and institutions all across the state which are suffering similarly because of his obsession with partisan power politics."

'Factionalism' In GOP Hit By Scranton

HARRISBURG—Gov. William W. Scranton said yesterday he does not want to see a resurgence of factionalism which could split the GOP in the upcoming presidential elections.

Scranton, whose name has been mentioned as a favorite son candidate, said however he will do nothing to interfere with representatives of other possible Republican nominees who seek a pledge of commitment from the state's GOP delegation.

Seeks Unity

Scranton's statement, made at a press conference here for college newspaper editors, was taken as another attempt by the governor to maintain unity in the Pennsylvania GOP delegation.

Supporters of Sen. Barry Goldwater, R-Ariz., have formed citizens committee for the nation's leading conservative spokesman in the western and eastern sections of the state.

Supporters of New York Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller, with whom Scranton is meeting today, have thus far not sought a pledge of commitment from the state Republican organization.

MEET THE PRESS? Governor Scranton did meet the press yesterday—the collegiate press, that is. The governor spoke to a group of college newspaper editors in the state capitol.

'Twilight Zone' Demo Caucus May Hold Fate of Appropriations Bill

Demo Caucus May Hold Fate of Appropriations Bill

By LARRY LAMB

The fate of the non-preferred appropriations bill, including the University's request for $23 million, remains suspended in the twilight zone of the Democratic caucus.

As Gov. William W. Scranton indicated at his press conference with college newspaper editors yesterday, the Democratic leaders in the State House and Senate have said they will meet in caucus to discuss the governor's appropriation offer.

So far the governor has received no report on the results of the caucus discussion, nor have the minority leaders given any indication that the matter has even been brought up.

History of Battles The bill has a history of legislative battling and political maneuvering, including charges of irresponsibility from both parties.

Non-preferred appropriations, a total $73 million bill, provides funds for state-aided colleges, universities, hospitals and institutions. Without these funds most of the institutions involved could not continue to operate.

Since the bill does not include money for priority operations of the state government, a two-thirds majority is needed for its passage. The Republicans, alone, are not strong enough in numbers to produce the measure's approval.

Defeated Twice

Thus, Democrats twice were able to defeat the bill during the regular session. They have admitted that the move was calculated to help them gain favorable reapportionment in the General Assembly.

Republicans adjourned the regular session over Democratic protests, and the appropriations bill was pigeon-holed along with reapportionment.

The special session now in progress was called for Nov. 12 to act on legislative reapportionment.

Sends Letters

On Oct. 29 the governor sent letters to Charles R. Weiner, Senate minority leader, and Anthony J. Petrosky, House minority leader, in which he offered to include the non-preferred appropriations bill in a special session if they would guarantee enough votes to get

Waits for Assurance Of Democratic Help

By DAVID BOLBACH
Editor

HARRISBURG — Gov. William W. Scranton said yesterday he was "hopeful" of getting the non-preferred appropriations bill through the legislature immediately following the special session on reapportionment.

But he added that he has not yet been assured full

Democratic support for the bill.

Speaking to a special press conference for editors of college newspapers throughout the state, Scranton said that Charles R. Weiner, Senate minority leader, and Anthony J. Petrosky, House minority leader, have not informed him of the results of a Democratic caucus on the appropriations bill.

"I asked them to bring back comments from the caucus, which they have not yet done," the governor said.

Scranton reiterated his claim that "reprehensible" conduct by the Democrats has been responsible for the delay in the bill's passage.

When questioned on the status of the University, Scranton said he has always felt that Pennsylvania is "the" state university and added that he felt "most of the legislators also look on it as the state university."

No More Clarification

However, he said he did not feel that the legislature should attempt to clarify the University's status as a public or private institution any more than it has already.

"The present system is preferable to having the University totally controlled by the state legislature, as at Ohio State University," the governor said. Referring to meetings of the University's Board of Trustees, the governor said he felt it should have the right to private meetings just as any large corporation.

He again suggested that the board hold meetings two or three times a year with the student body to establish a rapport between the two groups.

Open Meetings: 'Holocaust'

But if the meetings were open to the public, he said, the result would be "a holocaust."

Scranton touched on a wide range of other subjects including the state sales tax, the new state liquor law, the college loan and scholarship amendment, the reasons for the defeat of the constitutional convention referendum and the increase in employment and industry in Pennsylvania.

Asked if he felt college-operated bookstores should be exempted from the textbook tax, the governor said that if the tax is exempted for college-operated bookstores, it should be exempted for all textbooks, no matter where they are sold.

Liquor Law

The new liquor law, Scranton explained, was not aimed at college students in particular but at all persons under 21.

He called the new law "a step forward" because it puts "the legal burden of proof on the receiver as well as the seller."

Discussing the college loan and scholarship amendment recently passed by the state's voters, Scranton said he was glad it received approval because "both the national and state governments should be doing a good deal more than they are for students."

He added, however, that the state will first start out with the loan program of $425,000 which has already been passed by the legislature.

Additions After

"We will get this program going well before any additions are made," he said.

The defeat of the constitutional convention referendum, Scranton said, was caused primarily by two reasons.

The major reason, he said, was the fear of many persons in rural areas that a new constitution would mean deterioration of home rule.

He cited a great fear of a graduated income tax as the second reason.

Scranton said neither reason was valid because a new constitution would probably mean an increase in home rule and would not necessarily mean a graduated income tax.

Greatest Decrease

Commenting on unemployment in Pennsylvania, the governor said that during the past year unemployment has made "the greatest decrease in modern history."

From January to October, he said, unemployment decreased from 9.4 per cent to 6 per cent.

He added that there has been more new industry in the state this year than during the last 12 years and more industry expansion than in the last 15 years.

300 Students Sign For Trip to 'Fair'

More than 300 students have told the Hetzel Union travel committee they want to see the 1964 World's Fair in New York City.

Vera Hess, committee chairman, said she was both surprised and pleased with the favorable response given to the committee's request that interested students sign up.

"Some people told us we'd be lucky to have 60 students sign up," she said. "But they were wrong."

The committee expects to be able to arrange transportation and accommodations for all students who expressed an interest in making the trip, Miss Hess said.

Tentative plans call for a Friday afternoon through Sunday night excursion through the weekend in May. Transportation costs are expected to be about $8 per person and hotel accommodations should be about $5 per person per night, Miss Hess said.

$5 Deposit

The students who expressed interest during the sign-up period, now ended, will be asked to commit themselves early in the winter term by placing a "small" deposit of about $5 with the committee. At about the same time, a meeting will be held to further explain the committee's plans and the trip outline.

Miss Hess said the committee is at work on two other projects related to the World's Fair. One involves the establishment of a permanent display in the HUB, where latest information on the fair and trip will be available.

The other project is the compilation of job opportunities at the fair through its conclusion. Miss Hess explained the committee has entered into extensive correspondence in an effort to prepare the most complete job directory possible.

At this point, she said, hotel accommodations will be arranged at the Biltmore and Edison. Students will be responsible for their own schedule and expenses while on the trip. The winter term meeting is being designed to answer students' questions and provide information which will make the trip as smooth as possible, she said.

Folklore Society Hootenanny Slated For HUB Tonight

The University Folklore Society will present a Hootenanny at 7:30 p.m. in the Hetzel Union ballroom.

Featured artists for the presentation are: the Greenbriar Boys, Logan English, Judy Roderick, Len and Dick and the Steel Singers.

The Greenbriar Boys are a guitar, mandolin and five-string banjo trio who classify themselves as a part of the "urban movement."

They have been notably successful in "bluegrass," winning the Bluegrass Competition at Union Grove, North Carolina

AWS Plans Projects for Winter Term

The Association of Women Students Senate last night discussed the possibility of planning projects and setting specific goals for winter term.

Ideas suggested for future AWS action include the backing of a "worthwhile project" such as the Model United Nations or a University College Bowl.

Also suggested was the possibility of setting up an AWS project that would involve active participation of more women students on campus.

The senate also agreed to establish a dress code for the final examination period beginning Thursday, Dec. 13, and ending on Friday, Dec. 13. During that time women students will be permitted to wear casual attire in the dining halls. Exception is the Sunday noon meal, which will require the wearing of heels and hose by all coeds.

Grange Sponsors Membership Drive

The Penn State Grange is currently holding a membership drive to increase the size of the chapter here.

The organization plans to conduct a series of informal meetings during the winter which will be open to all interested students. Arrangements are now being made for a joint meeting with the Centre County Young Patrons of Husbandry.

In the past, Grange has drawn membership primarily from the colleges of agriculture, home economics and education, but students from other colleges are welcome. All interested in joining should contact Paul Prentiss, AD 7-2959, or Patricia Scott, UN 5-7726.

Home Ec Honors Scholar

Barbara Ann Beyerle (11th-home economics-Reading) was named outstanding senior in the College of Home Economics at the 11th annual awards banquet last night in the Nittany Lion Inn.

Miss Beyerle received a $300 award donated by the Borden Company Foundation, Inc., with the honor.

The senior, who has maintained an all-University average of 3.96 thus far, was given the award by John H. McCain, vice president of the Borden Foundation, Inc.

Grace M. Henderson, dean of the College of Home Economics, addressed the banquet guests.

Dean Henderson contended that these annual home economics awards "are becoming increasingly valuable." The $7,575 in gifts donated this year will aid in "developing the state's brain power," she added. She maintained that there are two groups of students whose continuing education really counts: those who receive financial aid and those who are determined to grow intellectually.

It is this latter group, she said, whose "growth will continue as long as they live. It is the purpose of the College of Home Economics to produce men and women of stature who will lead inquisitive and worthwhile lives."

Mild Weather Expected

There may be a few light showers this morning, but partial clearing and milder temperatures are seen for this afternoon. A high of 60 is likely.

Tonight should be mostly cloudy with a low of 42. Mostly cloudy skies and mild temperatures are expected tomorrow and there may be some showers late in the day or at night.
