

Supermarkets Report Shoplifting Problem

NEW YORK (AP) — Shoppers are sampling, pinching, switching their way through the supermarkets these days, leaving a trail of empty cookie packages and licked lids.

"If we don't catch 10 people a day at breaking open packages we're kind of disappointed," says Fred Gallant, manager of a Safeway store in Dallas, Tex.

"People switch labels on meat to get 20 or 30 cents off, mash the tomatoes, and pull the leaves off the lettuce," he said.

An Associated Press survey of supermarket managers and shoppers found numerous reports of nickel pinching, cookie nibbling, jelly-tasting shoppers sampling the grocer's wares on an eat now, pay later, if at all, plan.

The supermarkets complain it cost them millions of dollars a year and contributes to higher prices.

"We've had women open a peanut butter jar and dig their fingers in it for a taste," said an Atlanta, Ga., supermarket manager.

Woman Licks Top

A shopper in Atlanta said: "I even saw one woman break open a jar of preserves from a vacuum-sealed jar, lick the underside of the top and then put it back on and return it to the shelf."

A Santa Ana, Calif., market claimed it lost $1,100 in two months through the switching of meat price tags.

"A customer will take two meat packages out of the refrigerated bin, one low-priced and the other high," said an A&P manager in Dallas. "She'll walk up and down the aisles until she's in a secluded spot and then change the labels."

Damage To Produce

Phillip White, a Dallas grocer, said some shoppers are "so picky they do more damage to the fruits and vegetables than was done in the entire shipping process."

A Safeway store/spokesman in Los Angeles said he knew of a woman who weighed dozens of eggs so she could pick out the heaviest 12 for her carton.

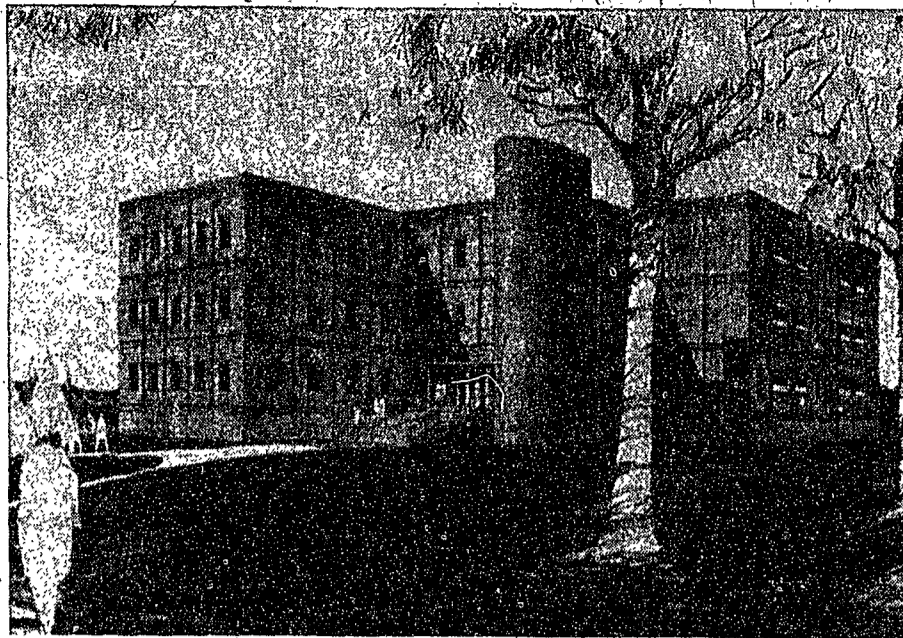

"We find cereals opened often," said an Atlanta supermarket manager. "Often it is a child who has opened it to find the prize in it. These days a child often knows which boxes contain the prizes. Occasionally you'll find a mother who brings the box to the cashier and pays for it. Often she simply replaces it on the shelf."

Nibble Cookies

A Detroit woman with two children said she frequently opens a box of cookies and lets the kids nibble them while she shops.

"It keeps them quiet and happy and I can get my shopping done much faster," she said. "Of course I pay for the cookies on the way out."

But a woman in Atlanta said she had put packages back on the shelf after her child opened them. "I figure I do enough shopping there for them to absorb the loss," she said.

ANIMAL SCIENCES BUILDING, for which ground will be broken at a brief ceremony tomorrow morning, will have this appearance. Building will be located on site of the sheep barn which will be removed when construction begins. The building, designed by Vincent G. Kling, Philadelphia architectural firm, will be constructed by the General State Authority.

Animal Science Building Planned

A brief groundbreaking ceremony for the Animal Sciences Building to be constructed at the University by the General State Authority will be held at 10:15 a.m. tomorrow near the sheep barn on Shortlidge Road.

State officials and legislators will join with trustees and officers of the University for the ceremony.

Among them will be Rep. Robert K. Hamilton, Speaker of the House of Representatives; Rep. W. Brady Hetrick, chairman of the House Agriculture and Dairy Industries Committee; Sen. Daniel A. Bailey, vice chairman of the Senate Agriculture Committee; Rep. Eugene M. Fulmer, of State College; Sen. George N. Wade, Camp Hill; A. J. Caruso, executive director of the General State Authority; Roger W. Rowland, president of the Board of Trustees of the University; Walter W. Patehell, vice president of the Board and chairman of the Trustee Committee on Physical Plant; Eric

A. Walker, president of the University; and Russell E. Larson, dean of the College of Agriculture.

The animal sciences building, for which the General State Authority received bids last month, will have four floors and will provide facilities for the programs in veterinary science, poultry science, and animal science.

Attempt To Neutralize Drainage University Participates In Minewater Research

Many streams in the coal mining regions in Eastern United States should get a few lease on life from a program supported by the Pennsylvania Coal Research Board being conducted by the University.

The overall concept is to neutralize the mine waters resulting from active mining operations now running into the streams and rivers.

Hollywood, in Clearfield County, has been tentatively chosen as the setting for the pilot plant to be designed by an interdisciplinary University team. Capital and operating costs for the treatment facility—a versatile and flexible research plant—may run the cost of the project to more than a million dollars. But State authorities believe it will be worth it if acid mine drainage problems can be minimized.

The pilot plant design submitted to the Coal Research Board would allow University investigators to process from 500,000 to one million gallons per day of "the worst mine water around," according to project director Harold L. Lovell, professor and head of the Department of Mineral Preparation.

Although it would be flexible and use a variety of reagents, the plant will be based on a neutralization process in which the acidic mine water is allowed to react with a basic substance which makes it acceptable for fish and other aquatic life.

The primary "tried-and-true" substance to be used in the plant will be crushed lime, but the use of other materials including limestone, sodium hydroxide, soda ash and ammonia will be studied. A variety of filtering rates and combinations will also be tested during the pilot operation to determine the most effective and least expensive methods for mine water renovation.

Operation and construction costs of the mine water plant could be cut if it were simply to be used to renovate the water, Lovell pointed out. But the state is interested in finding the best type of cleaning operation which will yield the most amount of good water for the smallest dollar over the long run, he said. This was why the University was selected to design and operate the pilot plant—to conduct a true research program and to come up with some concrete suggestions after the testing was finished.

FROM: PENN CENTRAL PERSONNEL SERVICE
TO: DECEMBER, MARCH AND JUNE GRADUATES.
SUBJECT: YOUR FUTURE
Why are more and more prospective graduates turning to us FIRST? To explore current job opportunities? Easy — they have discovered that we know the difficulty that the traditional smorgasbord of jobs presents to a new graduate, and have the professional recruiting experience to do a thorough job of separating real opportunities for him from the mountains of information available.
They know, as our many major client employers know, that our 15 years of industrial personnel management experience enables us to tell them candidly their strengths and shortcomings, and direct them to those situations which will give them what they really want.
They know that employers regard us as a valuable supplement to their own recruiting programs as a source of conscientious, qualified young people, and that our service charges are paid by the company in 9 out of 10 instances.
Yes... whether you're a Business Administration, Engineering, Scientific, or Liberal Arts graduate, turn where more and more selective employers are turning first...
