Sargent Named Replacement

Shenango Director Announces Retirement

Dale W. Houk, director of the Shenango Valley Campus of the University at Sharon, today announced his retirement, effective June 30. Named as his successor is Harold R. Sargent, who has been serving as assistant director of the Campus. Houk, former dean of students at New York University and former president of Slippery Rock College, has been serving as director of the Campus since its inception in spring of 1965. Prior to joining the University staff, Houk also served as higher education advisor to Thailand and an educational advisor in Korea with the International Cooperation Administration. He was director of community relations for WQED-TV, Pittsburgh's educational television station from 1959 to 1965. Sargent, a native of Union

City, Erie County, has also been a member of the Campus staff since its inception, serving for a brief period as acting director until Houk's appointment. He received his bachelor of science degree in social studies from Edinboro State College, his master of science degree in secondary education from the University of Pittsburgh, and his doctor of education degree from Penn State.

Sargent joined the University staff in 1963 as administrative assistant in the College of Engineering at University Park. He was named assistant director of the Campus in 1965.

University Plans Research Center For Educators' Use

A new Center for Cooperative Research with Schools has been established at the University to enable public school educators and faculty to attack research problems together.

Made possible by action of the Pennsylvania legislature during its 1966 session, the Center, which is nicknamed CREWS, is directed by C. Allan Riedesel, associate professor of education.

"We are concerned with opening new channels to handle current problems of educational concern," he explained. "Research conducted by our College of Education has often been basic in nature. We need more research that can be used directly in the classroom."

CREWS and the schools work together to alleviate these problems and develop research proposals for support of education projects in Pennsylvania communities. They will evaluate curriculum innovations and seek new techniques to use in studying school issues.

First Project

Their first project is already well underway. This is an in-service training program with two groups of mathematics teachers from the Williamsport schools. Not only will it increase teacher competence in basic mathematical concepts, but it will also compare the merits of computer-assisted instruction with more conventional classroom methods.

On tap are plans for a second computer-assisted instruction study, this one on spelling. The development of films for teacher education in the fields of science and mathematics is under consideration, along with a project to assess children's growth through their art work.

"Although it is not CREWS' function to furnish grants," Riedesel points out, "we will try to direct a school system to financial sources."

Research projects may be instigated either by a public school group, a University faculty member, or by CREWS itself. A teacher, for example, eager to try out an idea for improving learning in her classroom could talk it over with her principal, and together they would present their idea to the Center. The school always retains veto power over a project.

Excellent Response

Response to the Center has been excellent, Riedesel reports. When operations got underway early this year, questionnaires were mailed to all the chief school advisors in the Commonwealth, eliciting over 200 responses. A conference with school personnel is planned for summer to clarify objectives and discuss possibilities for action.

Faculty members from all departments of the College of Education are available to consult personnel from schools through the offices of the Center. Miss Marilyn Suyen and four graduate assistants are currently assisting Riedesel in the work. The graduate assistants are: Kenneth Getschow II, Lemont; Mrs. Marion Baxter, Jose, Gonzalez, and Mrs. Joyce Kane, all of State College.

"The Lady from Shanghai" 1948 - U.S.A.

Directed by Orson Welles, with Rita Hayworth, Orson Welles, Everett Sloane

A rousing murder mystery which involves Welles as a swaggering sailor, Rita Hayworth as a reckless beauty and Everett Sloane as her crippled, millionaire husband on a pleasure cruise to Acapulco. This film is full of "tricks," technically incredible but always interesting and refreshingly free from screen convention (typically Wellesian).

Short: "In Spite of the Tennis, the Facts are There" - 1966 - U.S.A.

A visually exciting and stimulating film by artist Tyrone Goss.
 Music by Albert Ayler and Co.
