

Collegian Open House Tonight

Bill Fowler (l) and George Geib (r) check the advertising ledger

Planning an editorial: City Editor Leslie Kay and Editorial Editor Julie Moshinsky

Photographer Dan Rodgers checks an engraving

Mervin Orndorf assembles type for a story at The Centre Daily Times shop

Now's Your Chance To Look Us Over

In the early hours of the evening preparations for the next morning's edition of The Daily Collegian begin in earnest. Actually people on the business staff have been working since the morning, taking bundles of papers to various distribution points on campus and in town, selling and designing ads and keeping our books in order.

But the evening belongs to the editorial staff and by 7 p.m. the city room is beginning to fill with reporters writing the stories you'll read in the morning. The teletype provides steady background noise as it raps out state, national and international news compiled by the Associated Press.

Phones are ringing, editors are yelling. Last minute pictures are being developed and the scanograver emits an every whine as it prepares the pictures for printing. Everyone is working feverishly to meet the 11 p.m. deadline when all copy must be at the Centre Daily Times shop where our printing is done.

We're usually too rushed to do little more with visitors than ignore them. But tonight will be different. From 6:30 until 9 (we have to get in a few hours of uninterrupted work) we'll slow down and be glad to show you all there is to see of our basement office in the north wing of Sackett.

Now it will be your turn to ask us questions and all the Collegian personnel from both the business and editorial staffs will be here to answer them. We're also serving refreshments.

For those of you interested in working with us, now's your chance to see where you'll be working and with whom you'll be working. Tomorrow is the first session of editorial candidate school at 7 p.m. in 124 Sackett. Business candidate school opens Wednesday Oct. 11 at 7 p.m., 124 Sackett.

But come see us tonight.

The "BOE"—Board of Editors— at a weekly policy meeting

Collegian Photos

by Michael Urban

Reporter Ricky Felke types a story

Business Manager Dick Welsman keeps a close watch on the budget

Where it all ends up—The Centre Daily Times printing press