The World

Students Protest in Japanese Port

SASEBO, Japan — Left-wing students and workers by the thousands converged on this southern Japanese port city yesterday to mount massive demonstrations against the visit of the nuclear-powered U.S. aircraft carrier Enterprise. Reinforced police made preparations to prevent a bloody riot.

The Enterprise and the nuclear-powered frigate Truxton, bound for Vietnam duty, made their way toward Sasebo but the time of their arrival was uncertain. Informed sources said the Enterprise would visit Japan even though it may be delayed a day or two.

Some left-wingers hope to use the visit for demonstrations to whip up public support for their campaign to end Japan's military ties to the United States.

Police, mindful of the bloodshed last November at Tokyo Airport when the Zongakuren students tried to block Prime Minister Eisaku Sato's departure for the United States, were taking every possible precaution.

No Talks without U.S. Cease-fire, Says Hanoi

PARIS — North Vietnam's representative in Paris declared yesterday that the United States must stop its bombardment without expectation of any reciprocity from North Vietnam.

The representative, Mai Van Bo, at the same time repeated Hanoi's position that talks will start with the United States after the bombings and other warlike acts cease.

A radio-television reporter asked him in an interview: "The United States seems to demand from you a gesture of reciprocity and asks that you do not take advantage of the suspension in bombardment if that occurs. What do you think of this?"

He replied: "The United States attacked, without a valid reason and without a declaration of war, the Democratic Republic of Vietnam, an independent and sovereign country. It was an intentional aggression and a defiance of all men and all peoples."

"In consequence the United States must end its acts of aggression without attaching any conditions whatsoever."

The Nation

Romney Argues for Vietnam Neutralization

CONCORD, N.H. — Campaigning Gov. George Romney said yesterday the United States should nudge South Vietnam toward peace negotiations with the Communist National Liberation Front as a possible avenue to "sound settlement" of the war.

"They can hold discussions and I'm all for their holding discussions," the Michigan Republican said. Romney roamed New Hampshire hamlets seeking votes in the nation's first presidential primary March 12, arguing that his plan for internationally guaranteed neutralization of Vietnam and her neighbors is the most likely path to peace.

Elaborating on that proposal at a Concord news conference, Romney said the National Liberation Front, political arm of the Viet Cong guerrillas, will have to be "reckoned with in any settlement in Vietnam."

Romney received a non-committal reply from former Vice President Richard M. Nixon to his proposal for a series of New Hampshire campaign debates. An aide wired Romney that Nixon will reserve comment on primary campaign matters until he announces his candidacy for president.

Columnists Ruled Liable in Dodd Case

WASHINGTON — A federal district judge ruled yesterday that two syndicated columnists are liable for damages to Sen. Thomas J. Dodd (D-Conn.), for using documents taken from his office.

Judge Alexander Holtzoff said, however, that his ruling, against columnists Drew Pearson and Jack Anderson, does not set the amount of damages due Dodd or say that damages may be recovered. He said the matter of damages would be settled at a later trial.

The decision came on a motion for summary judgment by Dodd in his million-dollar damage suit against the authors of the column "Washington Merry-Go-Round." The columnist admitted making use of documents from Dodd's office in a series of articles on the senator's finances and other dealings.

The Senate censured the senator June 2 on a charge of using political funds to pay personal expenses.

The State

Sales Tax on Labor Discriminatory?

EMPORIUM, Pa. — A former state legislator has been refusing to collect the state sales tax on labor performed at his auto repair garage on grounds it's discriminatory. "Dentists and doctors don't have to charge the tax for their labor," Erwin L. Murray told a newsman. "Neither do lawyers or carpenters. Why should I? That's discrimination."

Murray said regulations prepared by the state Revenue Department specify that the sales tax must be charged for labor performed by such business places as garages, service stations and dry cleaning shops. But a lot of other businesses, he said, aren't included.

"If a woman comes into my garage and has her car inspected," Murray said, "there's a $4 labor charge and she has to pay tax on that. Then she drives out and goes over to a beauty parlor and gets her hair fixed up for $15 and there's no tax at all. That's not fair."

Murray indicated that his battle with the state sales tax collectors might end up in the courts.

Westinghouse Stops Electric Car Production

PITTSBURGH — Westinghouse Electric Corp. said yesterday it has suspended manufacture of its Marketer I electric car because it failed to meet government safety standards.

Westinghouse said production of the small, battery-powered vehicle, "would resume as soon as possible after safety requirements for such vehicles have been published." Production of the cars, which Westinghouse describes as a limited purpose vehicle for shopping and neighborhood transportation, began in the late fall and was stopped in mid-December. Westinghouse said it produced less than 100 vehicles.

A Westinghouse spokesman said the autos did not meet safety requirements in the area of passenger protection, and pointed out the firm currently does not have facilities to do extensive crash-testing.

George W. Jenstedt, general manager of Westinghouse's Transportation and Industrial Equipment Divisions, said that while the Marketer "is not intended to compete with high-speed autos, it nevertheless meets three-fourths of the safety standards required for passenger cars."

The car, powered by 12, six-volt lead acid batteries, is capable of traveling about 50 miles at a top speed of 25 miles per hour on a single charge.

Demonstrators Retain Rights

Students who deliberately disrupt University operations on matters of principle are still entitled to "full legal rights as students and due process of law," Charles Lewis, vice president for student affairs, said yesterday.

Speaking in an interview, Lewis said the judicial structure, and especially its provisions for appeal, are meant to insure fair treatment for students. All students are entitled to the same rights, he said.

Lewis discussed the speech on demonstrators by Dr. Ernest Pollard, professor of biophysics, before the University Senate last week. In the speech, Pollard recommended suspension of students disrupting the University's operations by deliberate actions based on principle.

Lewis said the speech did not represent a new disciplinary policy but dealt with a "new dimension in demonstrations, deliberative in nature, demonstrations on principle."

He said the University Senate was "very wise in considering the speech as forensic business and not legislative action."

"No Arbitrary Judgment"

"I am certain no one wants to pass arbitrary judgment on students. I don't think suspension would be automatic for offenders and I know Dr. Pollard did not want this. He wants due process for all students," Lewis said.

"The University makes policy decisions through dialogue-discussion with the staff, deliberations in the Senate, discussion with the students. Some demonstrators seek to override decisions and to reject them by preventing them from being effected."

"To use the freedoms that we have, free expression for example, to deprive others of their freedoms is a terrible thing."

The vice president said a segment of students in the nation's universities have decided to ignore channels for dialogue and put themselves above their fellow students and their administrators in setting policy.

Lewis asserted the University welcomes political action by students and said he hoped student organizations would participate in election year activities. "I am looking forward to seeing the Young Democrats and the Young Republicans come out of the woodwork this year," he said.

Admission of Disadvantaged

Turning to admissions policy, Lewis said the criteria of high school achievement and college board scores "works against the culturally disadvantaged."

"Education is the key to upward mobility, better economic standing. The disadvantaged youth lacks a good educational home environment.

There are very few books or magazines around, his parents themselves may lack an educational background which would enable them to help their children."

Lewis said the problem of finding a way for the culturally disadvantaged to make their way to higher learning is a special concern of the land grant universities. He said the University is participating in several educational programs. Head Start for example, which may improve the situation.

The admissions policy, Lewis explained, seeks to accommodate a substantial portion of Pennsylvania's college age population, about 12 per cent. That percentage has not been attained yet, but seems to be a reasonable goal, Lewis said.

He said the justification for accepting out-of-state student for the undergraduate program was that students from different areas "broadens the experience of students."

Kelly Receives Award, Tells of Corps Work

By KITTY PHILBEIN
Collegian Staff Writer

Asking for love and service to the disadvantaged of America, Job Corps Director William P. Kelly accepted the first annual Distinguished Service to Youth Award from the College of Human Development last night.

The award, a plaque commending Kelly for his "courageous, imaginative, and competent leadership," was presented by Elizabeth Gaumer, Human Development Student Council president.

Preceding the presentation, Kelly addressed the convocation of the College, reminding them that they, the students are "the architects of the new era... the next generation of American leadership." This entails a responsibility, Kelly said, demanding that we try to free those who are "unfree; unfree from hunger, sickness, and ignorance."

"It requires that part of our character and intellect that is the best and most human in us," Kelly said, "and this strikes me as being an ethic for our time."

"Commitment and Competence" Welcoming the guests, Donald H. Ford, Dean of the College of Human Development, hailed Kelly as a "person who sets a fine example in training young people to go out with commitment and competence into the world."

Guests of honor at the convocation included 18 girls from the Job Corps center at Drums, Pa. A representative of the group presented Kelly with a citation, thanking him for his part in their Corps training.

Unable to attend but sending telegrams of regret and congratulations were Sen. Joseph S. Clark and Sen. Hugh Scott; Congressmen Elmer Holland and Albert Johnson; Bill Moyers, former special assistant to President Johnson, and Sargent Shriver, Director of the Office of Economic Opportunity.

Earlier yesterday, Kelly made the announcement that what he most desires is to be out of a job. "I would like to see the Job Corps go out of business," Kelly told local television and newspaper reporters at a news conference.

Continuing, Kelly explained that the educational system in this country ideally should do what the Corps is doing now in its stead, namely, correcting the "horrendous waste of human resources" involving disadvantaged youth from 16 to 21 years of age.

David Gottlieb, now a professor in the College of Human Development, was Kelly's assistant from 1964-67. Speaking for Kelly, he evaluated the Corps' growth, saying that "three years ago, the Job Corps was considered a dead horse in the War on Poverty; now it has become a model of what an educational enterprise can look like."

Kelly outlined some basic facts and statistics on the Corps and its operations. There have been 108,000 young people in and out of the program to this point, 7,800 of whom have successfully been placed in jobs. The gap between those placed and those jobless was explained by the fact that 16 and 17 year-olds are limited by national labor laws.

Describing life as a Corpsman, Kelly explained that it is a whole new environment for these "kids that the rest of the world has walked away from." The 123 centers across the nation are of three main types: conservation work centers for young men, and separate urban centers for men and for women.

The main aims of the program are to upgrade the basic education of the youths, 40 per cent of whom are unable to read or write upon arrival at a center, and to teach vocational skills enabling the youths to get "on the first rung of the ladder to success."

Corps in Steady State Although Kelly described the Corps as being "in a steady state," with no plans for more centers than there are currently, he outlined some future programs under the Corps.

One involves the conversion of a conservation center in either Montana or Wyoming into a sort of halfway house for the disadvantaged American Indians. The Indians are too reservation-oriented to be able to integrate into American life.

The converted center would at first be solely for Indians, then gradually other people would be admitted, slowly adjusting the Indians to the culture switch.

A center in Baltimore, Md., presently is experimenting with permitting unwed mothers and their children to remain together, rather than sending the children to welfare societies. Kelly said the sociological and psychological implications of such a male-excluded environment are being studied.

Regarding the Human Development award he was receiving last night, Kelly said it was important in that it indicated the point had been reached when universities such as Penn State recognized the Corps and honored it for what it had done as a group, rather than honoring only Kelly as its director.

WILLIAM P. KELLY, national director of the Job Corps, receives the Distinguished Service to Youth Award from Elizabeth Gaumer, president of the College of Human Development's Student Council. The presentation was made at a convocation of the college in the HUB last night.

Shafer Administration Guards Secret

LSD Case Still Nebulous

PHILADELPHIA (P) — The identity of six students reportedly blinded by the sun while under the influence of the drug LSD and the Pennsylvania college they attended when it happened 18 months ago, still was a secret today.

Continued pressure from the administration of Gov. Raymond Shafer apparently stalled immediate disclosure of the name of the school involved—at least until a current investigation of the incident is completed.

State Sen. Benjamin Donolow, a Philadelphia Democrat, had promised to reveal the college but later told a news conference he was asked to remain silent "until the state checks out all the facts."

Donolow said he investigated the LSD story and "determined it is true." However, he has disputed the version that the six young men, all college juniors, were totally and permanently blinded.

"Two of the boys have some sight perception," he said.

Donolow also said four of the students changed their curriculum and were enrolled in other colleges "in order to accommodate their defect and two remain at the same institution."

He acknowledged that the incident occurred, as originally claimed, in a college in Western Pennsylvania. But he declined to confirm or deny a published report that it was Edinboro State College.

However, Edinboro's president, Dr. Chester T. McNeerney, said in a statement it wasn't his school.

The governor's office at Harrisburg confirmed again, despite Donolow's version, that the six students were permanently blinded by staring, unblinking, at the sun while lying in a meadow near the college.

Donolow said that the six, found by three other students, all were sworn to secrecy by the college. The state senator said the stricken youths were treated by private doctors and never taken to a hospital.

USG To Provide Lawyer For Alleged Drug-Users

The Undergraduate Student Government will give legal aid to University students charged with the possession or use of drugs.

"USG is committed to help students in trouble by referring them to our lawyer," said President Jeffrey Long last night.

"USG does not see any obligation beyond this; we are merely interested in telling students what the consequences are for such action," Long said.

Long feels that USG should become involved in national as well as campus issues. "USG has failed to see that decisions that affect University students are made in Harrisburg and Washington," Long commented.

In this area, Long commented on the possible increase in tuition to $900 a year. "We have begun to contact various state legislators to investigate such an increase," Long continued.

Old-business that USG Congress will discuss at tonight's session includes the spring concert project. According to Long, a USG sponsored concert is not a closed issue.

"No other group is sponsoring a concert because of various disadvantages, but we feel that students are entitled to one," Long announced.

"We are not really concerned about how much money we make. USG considers such a project as a service to University students."

The USG tutoring service will also be available to students this winter. According to committee chairman Sally Loll, students interested in being tutors may sign up in the various dining areas between six and eight o'clock tonight. Forms will also be available at the Hetzel Union Building desk from 9:30 to 12:30 tomorrow morning.

The USG charter committee to avail its services to campus organizations. Interest groups may submit their charters and constitutions to USG for examination.

USG may review the constitutions, but may not officially grant club charters. Commenting on this situation, Long said, "We are often given responsibility, but not authority."

Two Americans Murdered In Guatemalan Gunplay

GUATEMALA (P) — Machine-gun fire from a passing car killed the two top U.S. Army and Navy officials in Guatemala yesterday and wounded two other American military men. They were apparent victims of a wave of politico-gangster violence ravaging this Central American country.

Earlier in the day, machine-guns killed a former congressman from the era of leftist President Jacobo Arbenz Guzman, who was toppled in 1954 by a U.S.-supported army coup aimed at preventing a complete Communist takeover. The congressman's bodyguard also was slain.

Police quoted a gardener as saying the Americans, driving toward their homes, were shot from a green car that drove off fast.

The slain Americans were Col. John D. Webber Jr., 47, head of the U.S. military group in Guatemala since 1966; and Lt. Cmdr. Ernest A. Munro, 40, head of the U.S. naval section.

A machine-gun burst killed Webber instantly. Munro died in an ambulance en route to a hospital. Webber was from Houston, Texas, and Munro from Rockland, Maine.

The wounded were Sgt. Maj. John R. Forster, 42, of Salem, Ore., and Navy Senior Chief Radioman Harry L. Greene, 41, of Omaha, Neb. Greene was reported critically hurt. Forster was discharged from the hospital after treatment of an arm wound.

There was no immediate indication from police on the identity of the assassins or their motives.

In the past year and a half, more than 1,000 persons, perhaps as many as 4,000, have died in the terrorism of political factions and gangsters.

The attack on the Americans occurred on the eve of the scheduled arrival here of Covey T. Oliver, U.S. assistant secretary of state, who is on an orientation and get-acquainted tour of Central America.

Heavy Casualties Force Communist Retreat

SAIGON (AP) — Two weeks of open offensive operations have cost the Communists 5,084 dead, by account of South Vietnam's military headquarters. The toll could be a factor in the enemy's latest reversion to ambush tactics.

South Vietnamese spokesmen announced Tuesday that 2,216 Communist soldiers were killed last week. This relatively high loss followed up the record 2,868 who fell in the Dec. 31-Jan. 6 period of the Red winter-spring drive.

Government losses were also reported high, with 367 soldiers killed, 946 wounded and 110 missing or captured. Casualty reports of the Americans and other allies will be issued today.

Communist bushwhackers truck in the central highlands and a South Vietnamese infantry company on a road-opening mission near the coast below Da Nang Monday. The allies hit back hard in each case.

U.S. spokesmen said 37 Communists and three Americans were killed in the highlands clashes, both in the 4th Infantry Division's area of operations, and 23 Americans were wounded. Damage to the convoys were reported light.

The spokesmen said the shooting raised to more than 1,500 the number of the enemy killed in the 4th Division's sector in the last four months. They had no figures at hand on the division's casualties in that period, though they have been running considerably less.

Government spokesmen said that in the road fight, the South Vietnamese killed 40 guerrillas at a cost of 15 men killed and 34 wounded.

A Special Forces camp west of Dak To has received heavy enemy mortar fire the past two days, but was reported to have come through without casualties.

The area is near the point where frontiers of South Vietnam, Laos and Cambodia join and where there have been reports of continuing enemy infiltration. Although the American forces are conducting search and destroy missions and running patrols through the area, rugged terrain offers excellent cover for secret movement.

Farther north near Khe Sanh, west corner of the country, U.S. B5 bombers carried out raids for the second consecutive day Tuesday against what is believed to be another threatening buildup.

The explosives churned the earth 10.5 miles north of Khe Sanh. The targets were described as enemy troop concentrations and a staging area.

There have been accounts of increased enemy movement in that sector, linked with reports of sharply increased infiltration around the western end of the demilitarized zone via Laos.

Accused Killer Fights Extradition

One of the two men accused of murdering a University student last term has been ordered returned to State College to face charges.

Alphonso W. Kyles, accused in the slaying of Charles F. Miller, was given seven days yesterday to fight his extradition from Annapolis, Md.

Miller was killed Sept. 23 in his apartment at 220 E. Nittany Ave. He was shot three times, and was found with a long gash across his back.

Maryland Gov. Spire T. Agnew ruled yesterday that Kyles should be returned to Pennsylvania, but gave Kyles seven days to appeal the order. The native of Washington filed suit yesterday to halt his extradition.

Also charged in the Miller murder is Frederick Robbins Jr., 30, of Adelphia, Md.

Miller, 20, seventh term major in ceramic engineering, was from Falls Church, Va. At the time of his murder, his wife and child were staying in Arlington, Va., waiting to join him here later.

On the day of the murder, Kyles and Robbins were arrested by State College Police. Chief John R. Juba said that Miller was killed when he "refused to cooperate when some demand was made."

Juba said that the demand could have involved blackmail of a motive in connection with a woman.

The slaying was the first student murder to occur in State College since 1940, when a 17-year-old coed was found beaten to death four miles from campus. Her murder has never been solved.
