Marines Lag In Copter Warfare

DA NANG, Vietnam (P) — Some call it "the chopper gap." They mean the U.S. Marines, pioneers of helicopter warfare against guerrillas, have fallen behind the Army in capacity to launch and supply large combat operations by air.

The Marine ground commanders who complain about this say a shortage of helicopters and the stringent safety rules governing pilots have cost them opportunities for victory and sometimes meant needless Marine casualties have not enough helicopters were available.

The controversy has bubbled and occasionally raged at the middle level in the Marine command for three years.

Recalling past rivalries between the Navy's "battleship admirals" and the Air Force "bomber generals," the officer said, "I guess we have our jet generals.

Senior officers in the 1st Marine Air Wing, which controls the Leathernecks' air effort in Vietnam, say their mixture of choppers, jets and transports is fixed under the basic Marine role developed in World War II. This calls for assaulting beachheads, pushing inland to secure them and then turning the whole thing over to the Army.

They had no gunships. Today the H34 is still the largest single part of the Marine chopper inventory although the Marines say Huey Cobras will be added soon. The Cobra is the fastest and hardest-hitting helicopter available. It was developed for the Army, which uses it in increasing numbers in Vietnam.

300 Copters

At the present the Marines have about 300 of their own helicopters to serve nearly three divisions in the northern provinces. The Army's 1st Air Cavalry Division, operating in the same area, counts 425 choppers. It is the single most mobile unit in the war and fills a role the Marines con-ceived during the Korean War.

In the category of fast-hitting helicopter assaults the Marines recently were averaging one every day or two, often with Vietnamese troops. The 1st Cav averages two assaults per operational battalion a day.

In the 3rd Army corps there are about 1,000 helicopters to handle the needs of less than three U.S. Army division plus Vietnamese troops. Marine ground officers say money is the key reason for what they call the deficiency in Marine choppers.
