'Empty Stomach Theatre' Opens

An attempt will be made to investigate the possibilities of "morning theatre" in the inception of the "Empty Stomach Theatre." Sunday morning in the Pavilion Theatre. The first production will be a new experimental play by Louis Florimonte, recipient of the Shubert Foundation Award for play-writing. The work premiered earlier this year at the Exit Theater in New Haven, Conn., and received wide critical acclaim. Florimonte's play is the basis of a pilot program to establish the "Empty Stomach Theatre" here on campus. "We tend to think of theater in our society as primarily an evening affair; even the matinee is considered inferior to the evening performance," commented John Orlock, director of the production. "What we hope to do is to explore the possibilities of creating theater from both audience and actor standpoints."

Eakin Eisenhower Chapel. The program is the third in the "Creative Edge" series for Spring Term and is open to the public. The series is designed to further interdisciplinary conversation and to raise questions of human values in today's world. Willower is professor of education in the Department of Educational Services of the College of Education. The "Creative Edge" series is sponsored by the United Campus Ministry and the Office of Religious Affairs. Those who wish may bring their lunch at noon; coffee and tea are available. Floyd F. Bitzer, associate professor of speech at the University of Wisconsin, will serve as guest lecturer and consultant in the Department of Speech next Thursday and Friday.

He will discuss "Some Main Problems in Rhetorical Theory" at 11:10 a.m. Thursday in 258 Willard and "The Case for a Situational Approach to Rhetoric" at 11:10 a.m. Friday also in 258 Willard. The public is invited to these lectures. He will also participate in seminars on rhetoric and philosophy with graduate students and faculty members of the Department of Speech. Speech on Monkeys Donald R. Meyer, professor of psychology at Ohio State University, will speak Thursday on "The Habits and Concepts of Monkeys." The program, sponsored by the Department of Psychology, is scheduled for 8 p.m. in 101 Chambers and will be open to the public. Two Department of English faculty members at the University will join a visiting professor as commentators on student interpretations in the Pennsylvania Intercollegiate Interpretative Reading Festival, to be held next Thursday and Friday in the Hetzel Union Building Assembly Room. Philip Young, research professor of English and fellow of the Institute for the Arts and Humanistic Studies, will comment on readings from the works of William Faulkner and Ernest Hemingway on Friday morning. Young is a Hemingway specialist, the author of "Ernest Hemingway, a Reconsideration" (1966). He has just completed an inventory of all Hemingway manuscripts which will soon be published in book form. Brian John, assistant professor of English, has been chosen as commentator on students' poetry readings, taken largely from the works of Gerard Manley Hopkins, Emily Dickinson and Dylan Thomas. John received his doctor of philosophy degree from the University of Wales and has published articles on British poetry. Festival poetry readings are scheduled in two sessions Thursday from 1:30 to 2:30 p.m. and from 4:15 to 5 p.m. Wallace A. Bacon, chairman of the Department of Interpretation in the School of Speech at Northwestern University, will be the third festival critic. He will comment on drama readings, principally from Shakespeare's works between 9:15 a.m. and 12 noon Friday. Bacon will also present a lecture-recital, "The Act of Interpretation," at 3 p.m. Thursday in the H113 Assembly Room.

"Teacher Subculture" Donald J. Willower will speak on "The Teacher Subculture" at 12:30 p.m. Tuesday in the Memorial Lounge of the Helen
