Three new exhibits are in he Pattee Library through

July 27.

"Dickinson's Comprehensive Pictures of the Great Exhibition of 1851," a collection of lithographs, is on display in the Circulation Department. / The lithographs were made from paintings by Nash, Haghe, and Roberts for Prince Albert. Five of the works on display belong to the private collection of Charles Mann, Curator of the Rare Books Room, and the others are from the Rare Books Room collection. The complete collection is available for study in the Rare Books Room.

In the Main Lobby is a collection of color prints on Indian mythology which were loaned to the Library by Alfred Bobrowsky. Senior Research Associate in the Materials Research Laboratory. L. N. Mulay, Professor-of Solid State Science, assisted in the preparation of the detailed explanations accompanying each print.

First novelists are the subject of the exhibit in the Rare Books Room. Twice a year "Library Journal" publishes short articles by first novelists telling about themselves and their work. Manuscripts of these articles, photographs of the authors, and related materials are in the display. Included in the group is Alice Denham, a former "Playmate of the Month."

A segregated faith tends to shut its own truth in and other truth out. Its center of gravity is itself,

We need one another. Let us unite and supply that So long as we remain segregated into many faiths we deposit the very spirit of religion and deny ourselves in full

There has never been a time when there was greater need for religion to bring its full united strength to bear. Segregation is bad emotionally. It tends to cramp our we-feeling within the limits of fellow segregated sectarians rather than to include all religious people.

Segregation is bad intellectually. Through the ages, segregated faiths have demanded implicit—even blind—obedience. "Thou shalt!" and "Thou shalt not?" were not to be questioned.

History condemns segregation which limits, blights and pits faith against faith. A faith, emboldened by its sense of certainty, has fought other faiths with even greater zeal that it has fought irreligion.

Sects split communities, nations and the world into self-centered groups who disrupt society and make it hard to work together. Sectarian preferences and prejudices spill over into politics, education, business, the employment office, medicine and other fields as manipulators appeal to prejudice and play one group against others. By contrast. One Religion of Brotherhood would pool the Religious Experiences of all in the enjoyment of a common Religious Life of Service and in the search for greater Religious Truth. It is a Unity of Purpose — The Practice of Brotherhood.

The faiths have shown little inclination to merge. It became evident that if an inclusive religion were created in our day, individual One Religionists would have to create it. Numerous local One Religion groups are needed. Such a grass roots movement is likely to be more vital, dynamic and propagated to its moments. and meaningful to its members than one organized and
