Law practice, teaching

Novak reveals plans

Novak, who has resigned from his position effective March 31, has revealed he plans to go into private practice full time and occasionally teach at the University.

Since he was hired in Fall 1970, Novak has been counseling over 200 students each term on problems dealing mainly with landlord-tenant relations, contracts, and criminal charges.

"The criminal charges range from motor vehicle violations to felonies such as shoplifting," he said. He added that he has been counseling on service and repair, employment, and insurance contracts.

Novak said, "I don't represent any students in criminal cases." He explained that this applies to students he sees as legal advisor as well as those he sees in his private practice. "While I'm working at the University, it would created a conflict of interests," he said. Once I leave, the conflict of interest

Novak is currently practicing part time downtown. He explained that when a student comes in with a criminal case, he recommends that they get an attorney. "Quite a number of the students I advise have legal questions not involving the courts and not justifying the use of a

No specific plans have been made yet to replace Novak.

According to Al Green, treasurer of the Organization of Town Independent Students, there is a definite need for legal advice. "We need someone like Novak to give us answers. There is no law school to help us," he said.

Green said that before Novak was hired, there was a town lawyer on retainer. "We may get a lawyer on retainer again. People would come to OTIS for advice and then the OTIS representative would go talk to the Green also said that OTIS has asked Associated Students Activities for $25,000 for a university lawyer. "Our request has been thrown out every Associated Student Activities, said the replacement is found for Novak. "A lot turned down because "the University can't get involved in supporting all kinds of legal cases. That is why they have provided a legal advisor."

Jim Fritz, vice president of the Undergraduate Student Government, said that maybe OTIS and USG can help counsel some students until a replacement is found for Novak. "A lot of the students' questions are concerned only with University bureaucracy and don't require a lawyer," he added.

"Hopefully, the University will find an attorney to be on campus a few days a week to fill in until they decide if the student legal advisor position will be refilled," Fritz said.—JK

Boro to study transportation complex plans

Preliminary plans for the panding the borough's refuse development of a downtown collection service to include transportation complex will the University; be reviewed tonight at the review of a March meeting of the State College Borough Council. Council will meet at 7:30

m. at the Municipal Building on Fraser Street.
At this time Council will discuss the possibilities of renovating a borough building to house the combination bus terminal, taxi stand and car rental center. According to Council President Lawrence Perez, an inter-city transportation center in town was planned to eliminate the inconvenience posed by the location of the present center, on North Atherton Street in Ferguson Township.

Council will also consider action on the proposed gasoline station ordinance which imposes stringent aesthetic requirements on local gas stations and "stations-to-be."

Focus fights to exist

Collegian Staff Writer Focus magazine emerged last year with the hopes of establishing a literary tradition on campus. After two issues and a lot of work, it appears Focus is finished. The present editor, Stephen Rosenfeld—(9th-American studies-Cheltenham) is giving up the editorship, at least temporarily, to concentrate on other activities. Rod Nordland, Daily Collegian reporter, will take over his duties for Spring Term. graduates at the end of this

Asked if he would return to Focus next year, Rosenfeld hesitated in answering. "I don't know''; he said.

The last issue of Focus netted about two hundred dollars, according to Rosenfeld. He said, however, most of the money came from advertising and the response of readers was poor. The magazine sold, according to Rosenfeld's figures, about 1300 copies. Considering the number of students, staff, and faculty on campus, this is a small number.-The magazine was also sent
