

Machine: key to victory

By ART TURFA
Collegian Staff Writer
The Undergraduate Student Government elections are over, and speculation abounds as to why Mike Shields toppled incumbent Benson Lichtig and bested four other candidates for the presidency.

Although impossible to pick out one reason as being more important than the others, Shields' organization — nearly 200 people — conning mate who could have cut into Shields' vote. Others had second thoughts about Lichtig's purposely-delayed campaign onslaught.

In the end, the race boiled down to a two-man race. The other candidates, Maiale, Zlotucha, Ed Burrows and Oz wound up pulling a much lower vote than they had anticipated. The voters might have realized the fact that there were only two strong contenders.

Student interest in the election astounded nearly everyone. The total vote, 8,313, was markedly bigger than the vote was the preceding year.

All of those trying to unseat Lichtig had one thing in common: each of them expressed a desire to make USG more of a student-service organization. Similarities in the platforms emerged: several candidates mentioned alternate meal plans, Ritenour reform and parking reform, among others.

This shows a concern over USG which cut across all of the differing strata at the University. Whether or not this concern will fade away during the summer months is anyone's guess.

News analysis

tributed to Thursday night's outcome. According to Steve Arkans, president of the Academic Assembly and one of the key workers for Shields, "It's been the best organized campaign in Penn State's history."

Arkans was one of the many campus organization leaders that Shields gathered for his backing. Other supporters included the presidents of the Organization of Town Independent Students, Interfraternity Council, the Free University, many USG senators and USG Vice President Jim Fritz.

Some viewed the larger-than-usual turnout in Pollock-Nittany Halls as crucial to Shields' victory. There, he beat Benson Lichtig, the incumbent, by nearly 200 votes. Much of Shields' support was concentrated in this area.

In East Halls, considered by Lichtig as an integral link in his drive for re-election, his margin over Shields was only 76. A source from the Lichtig camp felt Lichtig would have to carry East by 300 in order to emerge victorious.

Both Shields and Lichtig, along with candidates Nick Maiale and Rick Zlotucha, spent considerable time in East during the balloting. One source thought Lichtig should have selected a run-
