Karr win breaks heated match open

Netmen topple Penn for first win over Ivy

By RICK STARR

It took Penn State 24 tries, but the Lions finally beat Ivy League foe Penn in a tennis match yesterday afternoon on the indoor courts. Obviously spoiled by past success, the Quakers reacted to the 5-1 defeat with a repertoire that included racquet throwing, opponent intimidating and even a tennis potshot at a Lion net fan.

The afternoon got off to a relatively quiet start with Lion number two man Walker Shivar and number four Tom Wright posting victories in their singles matches to give Penn State an early 2-0 lead. Shivar and his opponent, Larry Loeb, fought to a 6-6 tie in the first set of their match and finished it with a nine-point tiebreaker. With the score 3-3, Shivar forced Loeb into a mistake at the baseline and then smashed a short lob to take the set.

Loeb, who knocked Shivar out of the Easterns two years ago, was clearly dominated in the second set, 6-2. Shivar drilled a Loeb serve down the line for the final point.
"I'm playing the best tennis now that I've ever played," the Lion senior said after the match.

Wright's match with Quaker Herb Benham went to the tiebreaker in both sets. After winning the first set, Wright trailed throughout the second until he broke Benham to even it at 5-5. At this point, Wright rattled the Penn man with a series of passing shots and finally won the set 7-6.
"He had some unbelievable passing shots and a great lob," Benham said afterwards.
Penn State number one Jan Bortner took the day's only loss, a 7-6, 6-3 defeat to Steve Yellin.

Bortner had his first serve working until the final few games, but had difficulty keeping the ball in play. When Bortner's groundstrokes were in, however, they did a good job of keeping Yellin off balance, allowing Bortner to work for good position.
Number six John Karr then took on Richard Gerber for what Lion tennis coach Holmes Cathrall called the deciding match. Karr is just getting over a cold and Gerber is still recovering from a knee injury, but both players put on a stamina exhibition which Karr finally won 6-4, 5-7, 6-4. Karr used a perfect drop volley to win the final point.

"I think the Karr match was the one that broke their back," Cathrall said later.
After the Karr match the fireworks began.

Lion number five Bruce Issadore, and his opponent Andy Finn got into it early when Issadore began complaining that Finn wasn't giving him a chance to warm up.
At the same time on the next court, Lion number three Miguel Maurtua was warming up his competition, Penn senior Jayson Schwartz. Schwartz apparently got a little upset by some noise in the crowd and smacked a hard forehand into the gallery in an attempt to enforce some silence.

A Penn assistant pin pointed the trouble as an "un-nice comment" by a girl in the crowd but later Schwartz said "a few people were laughing and it bothered me."
Maurtua took the first set 6-3 and then Schwartz tried intimidating him with a series of out calls. "That was out this time," Schwartz called at various points, somewhat disgusted by Maurtua's knack for hitting the end lines with his shots. Maurtua dropped the second set 3-6 but came back to take the final set and the match 7-5.

"I didn't get upset," Maurtua said afterward. "That's part of his strategy so if I get mad, it's bad for me."
Meanwhile, Issadore, warmed up by now, had just finished up a comeback 3-6, 6-

2, 6-2 win over Finn. Midway through the match Penn coach Al Molloy decided to start calling foot faults on Issadore so Shivar was enlisted to keep an eye on the player's footwork.
"Some of my guys were foot faulting and some of the Penn players were, but it wasn't mentioned until they started to lose," Cathrall said.
After a final dispute concerning Finn's line calling ability, Issadore put the match away and sent his racquet into the air. Finn sent his racquet into the concrete.

The victory was the first ever for Penn State against Ivy League competition.
"You better believe I'm happy," Cathrall said.

Lukevics on hill against WVU

The West Virginia nine, which hasn't been tearing up the diamond scene lately with a 7-10 record, steps in at Beaver Field today for a 3 p.m. contest with the Lions (7-2).
While the Mountaineers' credentials don't match up to Penn State's, pitcher Mitch Lukevics isn't taking his foe lightly.
"They're no pushover," says Lukevics, a freshman who had signed a grant-in-aid to play football for West Virginia before opting for Penn State. "Even if they have an 0-10 record, you can't tell how good they are."
Lukevics has come on strong after impressing coach Chuck Medlar during the team's early spring trip to William and Mary. His four inning stint at W&M netted him 10 strike outs and against Rutgers he fanned nine in posting a one hitter.

Hoping to dent the righthander's string of 12 innings without yielding an earned run are Mountaineer infielders Don Porter and Glenn Young. Porter is the top run producer with 13 RBIs, one ahead of Young. Porter also leads the team in batting with a .321 average. Young is second with .313.
The Lions are also doing a little hitting of their own and boast a .321 team average.
Denny Dewitt has rapped out 13 hits in 27 at bats for a hefty .481. Close behind Dewitt are Don Stine (.385) and Rick Sherkel (.381).
Catcher George Coval has managed only four safeties in 21 trips to the plate, but three of them were home runs. —MS
