Samara can smile after winning the decathlon

Penn's Samara coasts to Games decathlon title

By MARK SIMENSON Assistant Sports Editor

Fred Samara turned in a leisurely 4:58.5 in the 1,500 meter run yesterday at Beaver Stadium to capture the decathlon title and a spot on the American World University Games track team.

Samara could have walked the final event, which is about 120 yards short of a mile. The Penn grad was the only decathlete without any major injuries when the two day trials

"I should have been more aggressive in the 1,500," Samara said reviewing the events that gave him a 7,623 point toal. By the time the 1,500 was scheduled, only Samara and Fresno State's Roger George were left. George's total was 7,279.

The first casualty was Bruce Jenner of Graceland College in Iowa. He lasted two events and withdrew because of a pinched nerve in his back. Ron Evans, the IC4A decathlon champ from Connecticut, joined Jenner after he fell too far behind to finish second. Evans said he was performing with a broken right hand he suffered playing basketball two days before. It wasn't until the pole vault that Evans needed a healthy right hand to grip the pole.

Samara won seven events, including the first three Saturday. Not wishing to gamble and get injured. Sunday he slackened off his hot first day pace that saw him accumulate 4,048 points.

In the shot put he was prohibited from wearing tape on his sprained finger. After balking at officials, he increased his personal best by four yards. When the decathlon was still close and could go to anyone, Samara calculated each event and the numbers of points for each increase in time or distance. In the high jump Samara and Penn assistant track coach Moon Mondschein plotted what heights to jump at. He finally cleared 6-4 on his third try. He later missed at didn't seem to bother him that he missed at 6-

Samara missed qualifying for the Nationals by 32 points because of bad weather. Penn coach Jim Tuppeny met with officals for seven hours trying to get his decathlete in.

Samara is known for the meet that he did compete in and not the missed NCAA's.

He competed against the Russian in Richmond, Va. earlier in the year. Caught in the middle of an NCAA-AAU squabble over the AAU-sanctioned meet, Samara chose to

When he returned to Penn, the NCAA had suspended him from collegiate competition. The hassle left Samara struggling to find his top performance level. Even now he doesn't like to talk about it.

"That NCAA-AAU thing is best forgotten," he said. "The second that it was over, I got Samara is in favor of setting up training camps for athletes with a national coach to run the program.

Training and the right coaching, he predicted, would make Ron Evans the best decathlete in the world. "Evans would destroy everybody." he ventured.

estroy everybody." he ventured.

The United States hasn't made any attempt

FOR SALE to heed Samara's idea and follow the pattern of training established by the Communist countries. He is still worried about the treatment of athletes.

'We've got to start worrying about the athletes," he said. "We've got to start doing things for the athletes."

Samara said he was attracted to the decathlon because its diversity and interest. He said, "It's impossible to get bored. You never get too good."

When he goes to Russia next week, Samara said he didn't expect to face Nikolai Avilov, the Olympic gold medalist and the world decathlon record holder with 8,454 points, who was at the Richmond meet.

The competition will be there, Samara adds, because the Russians have some men over 8,000 points.

Atlanta's Phil Niekro pitched the Braves' first no-hitter since they moved from Milwaukee eight years ago, stopping the San Deigo Padres 9-0 yesterday.

The 33-year-old righthanded knuckleballer allowed three walks and two other Padres baseruners on infield throwing errors. He struck out four.

It was the fifth no-hitter of the 1973 baseball season, but the first in the National League and the first for a Braves' pitcher since Warren Spahn did it for the Milwaukee Braves againt San Walking around the track infield, Maguire was informed that Mandera was attempting to double on the hot, humid day. Asked if he was interested in running another 5,000 meters, he replied, "I've done enough running today.

While Maguire earned a place on the USA squad, fellow Penn Stater Al Jackson wasn't so fortunate. He lost out to Dov Djerassi of Northeastern on the final hammer throw.
