Winter fuel shortage feared

WASHINGTON (AP) — White House adviser John Love conceded Thursday that the nation may face temporary heating-fuel shortages this winter. But he gave no indication that the Nixon administration will require allocation as a solution.

Love, director of the White House Energy Policy Office, told a Senate subcommittee that the administration is seeking to stimulate the supply of fuel oil, but that allocation is still under consideration.

He thus disagreed with a growing number of congressmen who are calling for mandatory allocation before winter.

Sen. Henry M. Jackson, D-Wash., the most persistent advocate of mandatory allocation, wrote President Nixon that the nation faces "serious power shortages and blackouts in major metropolitan areas this winter if action is not immediately taken to assist electrical utilities in securing essential fuel supplies."

At a news conference, Jackson released letters from Mayor Tom Bradley of Los Angeles and from the chairman of Consolidated Edison, the nation's largest electric utility, urging mandatory allocation.

Bradley said a fuel shortage is threatening the city's fire and police operations.

Chairman Charles F. Luce of Consolidated Edison said the New York City area faces the threat of power disruptions or sharply increased prices for power if utilities turn to foreign suppliers for the oil needed to fire electric generators.

"Home-heating-oil prices will inevitably rise to new highs unless Congress enacts legislation establishing mandatory fuel allocations," Luce wrote.

The Senate twice has passed Jackson's bill requiring the President to implement mandatory allocation. Under that bill, which is pending in the House, the President would direct the pricing and distribution of the nation's entire supply of oil and petroleum products to ensure that public-service needs are met and that each section of the nation gets a share of fuel.

Nixon already has authority to require allocation.

Dining hall dress revised for workers

Dining hall dress regulations for student employes are changing to provide a uniform suitable for the type of work done rather than on the basis of sex.

According to Director of Food Services, Robert Proffitt, uniforms now are assigned by job. People in the dish room and at the pot sink wear bib aprons, checkers and replenishers wear jackets, and those working behind the food counter wear dresses and jackets as available. All uniforms may be worn over street clothing.

Proffitt said wearing uniforms over street clothes "will eliminate the complaints students had about all the time previously involved in changing into uniforms."

He said, because of the large inventory of dresses, they must be used up before jackets can be provided for all student employes who want them. Only uniforms were purchased this summer. The total phase out of dresses may take a year Proffitt said.

Under the previous dress regulations, men wore jackets or bib aprons over their street clothing, and women wore dress uniforms.

According to AWS President Doreen Robotti, the results of AWS efforts to change the dress code have been very rewarding. She said Proffitt was very cooperative in bringing about the change.

Information, Referral & Peer Counseling Service

The Help Line is an organization of trained students and staff with the sole purpose of giving the Penn State community, especially students, a place to turn for information, advice, and HELP in tackling the big and little problems of university life. We have the answers to such everyday bothers as how to drop-add or where to borrow a movie screen. We're prepared to HELP with real crises, also, so call us with finance, sex, housing, travel or troubles.

We hope you will get into the habit of calling us first with problems or for information. We can save you the time and trouble of making calls, digging through catalogues, directories, or racking your brain for a name or program you're sure exists somewhere. Financed by the University, we are a centralized, organized, professional and paraprofessional group of people with a real desire to aid the person feeling the depersonalized effects of the huge multicampus. Students man the phones, giving us a unique peer-counseling function.

SONY. NO BALONEY.

Only Sony's Trinitron system has one gun with one big lens for a better-focused, sharper picture. Come in and check it out.

What you see here, magnified inside the circle, is the single gun of a Trinitron picture tube. One gun needs only one lens, so there's room for a big one.

Everyone else—even the new "in-line" tubes—must fit in three lenses, so they have to be smaller.

Why is a big lens such a good thing?

A big lens has a correspondingly big central portion. And the center is the most distortion-free part.

So you get a better-focused, sharper picture from Sony.

No baloney.

You also get a brighter picture. That's because of something else only Trinitron has—an Aperture Grille.

It lets the electron beams hit the screen in unbroken stripes—not in isolated dots, or ovals.

That way more electrons get to the screen. And you get a brighter picture.

From Sony. No baloney.

How about reliability?

Sony uses all-solid-state for all their models. Not just their more expensive ones.

Come in and check out the Trinitron picture yourself. Then you'll know we're not giving you any baloney.

Look at our large selection of dress and casual baggies. You'll find names like
