

AWS informs on rape problem

By JAN CHAPLICK
Collegian Staff Writer
A pamphlet designed to enlighten women on the problem of rape, how to avoid it and what to do in case of rape will be distributed by the Association of Women Students this week on the ground floor of the HUB.

Through distribution of the pamphlet and of a handout instructing how to report a rape on campus, AWS President Doreen Robbotti said AWS hopes to "make women aware and conscious of the problem."
Robbotti said when women are more conscious of the problem of rape, more precautions against rape can be taken. She said AWS hopes for a future referral or crisis center which will help rape victims.

According to its members, the Penn State Chapter of AWS first became interested in the problem of rape last year at an Intercollegiate Association of Women Students Convention, where AWS participated in several workshops on the problem. Robbotti said there is a problem at the University because a number of rapes are known to have happened, but only a few have been reported.

In addition to rape material, AWS members also will distribute handouts explaining House Bill 550, now before the Pennsylvania Senate Judiciary Committee. The bill will delete a section of the revised penal code that instructs a jury "to evaluate the testimony of a victim or complaining witness with special care in view of the emotional involvement of the witness and the difficulty of determining the truth with respect to the alleged activities carried out in private."

According to Robbotti, this provision serves only to cast doubt on the credibility of a rape victim. "This charge to the jury singles out a particular class of victims, those of rape, without sufficient reason, and is not required in other cases in which no witness is present to the crime," she said.

Robbotti encourages support of the bill by writing to members of the Senate Judiciary Committee. She said passage of this bill legislation would be an important step toward more equitable treatment for rape victims. The House passed the bill in May with a 133-54 vote.

AWS members also will distribute a fact sheet on AWS and the Women's Varsity Sports fall schedule.

In the past, AWS has had tables in the HUB to inform people on the abortion issue and gather signatures for women's hours in Rec Hall's steam room.
