

Pitt offense needs work

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Saturday's game against North Carolina Tar Heels in Chapel Hill.

Pitt's dragging offense that gained only 99 yards against Southern California last week doesn't have coach Johnny Majors in a panic, but he's still concerned.

"We need improvement in all areas of our offense," Majors said as his 17-ranked Panthers prepared for

The Pitt offense, featuring sophomore tailback Tony Dorsett, who last week smashed the Panthers' all-time rushing career record, faces a stingy Tar Heel defense.

North Carolina had allowed only seven points in two games until Maryland exploded for 24 points last week to hand the Tarheels their first loss this season.

Offensively, North Carolina has scrambled for 85 points, or four touchdowns a game, and like Pitt they're a tailback-oriented offense led by junior James Betterson who has rushed for 289 yards on 50 carries.

While Majors says nothing drastic is planned for his offense, he has indicated there will be some changes in the line. One of the could be at right tackle where Pat Gleich has been moved over from his defensive tackle spot.

A second move could be the promotion of freshman Tom Brozozka, a 6-foot-3, 235-pounder from New Castle, to the starting right guard spot. And the defensive unit will have to do without monster man Mike Bulino, who broke a bone in his left ankle against Southern Cal. Bulino is expected to be sidelined about six weeks.

Both teams go into the contest with 2-1 records. The game features two coaches who are also personal friend. Majors and Tar Heel coach Vince Dooley were not only assistant coaches together at Mississippi State, but they were also next door neighbors.

"It's obvious they're well coached," Majors says of North Carolina.

"I'm very impressed with their aggressiveness. They're one of the most aggressive teams we'll play all year. They have quickness on their takeoffs, and they'll come at you."

The Panthers defense, shown here against Tulane, will be without their leader, linebacker Mike Bulino this week.
