

Island biology program in fourth session

Applications are now available for 10 weeks of sun, sea and studying in Wallops Island, Va.

The University will sponsor its fourth annual marine biology program Spring Term. Applications for the program are available from Albert Guber, program director, in 309 Deike.

Fifty-two students will be accepted for the program made up of three four-credit courses. The courses are:

- An engineering course which teaches students to make instruments for their experiments.
- A geology course

covering the areas around Wallops Island.

- A marine biology course on the plants and animals.

The program includes a two-day cruise on a research vessel and other field trips.

Each of the three-week courses is taught by a different faculty member. Instructors live on the premises and are available to work with students at all times.

Students pay tuition to Penn State and a $500 room and board fee to the Marine Science Consortium, a group of 18 colleges and universities which owns the property in Eastern Virginia.

Recycling service discontinued

By JOHN McDERMOTT
Collegian Staff Writer

Recycle this paper? From now on that may be a difficult task due to the discontinuation of Eco-Action's recycling service.

Jim Prothero, president of the environmental group, said economic difficulties and a disappearing paper market have made the recycling process impractical.

Prothero said Eco-Action used to collect the paper and take it to a scrap dealer for shredding and baling. It then was sold to the building industry for use in plaster boards, he said.

Prothero said that too many people got into the recycling business and the paper became difficult to sell. "And with the housing industry hurting," he added, "the whole economic picture looks bad."

Prothero said Eco-Action, a branch of the Penn State Outing Club until 1971, will collect papers next term if the outlook is better.

"Don't count us out as dead," Prothero said. "Our emphasis is just switching."

Prothero said Eco-Action was originally started for recycling, which constitutes more than 50 percent of the workload. He said he would like to decrease it to about 25 percent so the group can concentrate on other projects.

Eco-Action also will sponsor a state-wide environmental conference of high schools and college. Prothero said. It will be held near the end of April and will include guest lecturers from the environmental field, he said.

Prothero said the group also is working to provide public education on environmental issues.

He said one method is to present facts, or "earth savers," on ways of preserving the environment as newspaper fillers.

Prothero said he would like to present these facts in a column like the "Consumer Corner" advertisement put out by the Organization of Town Independent Students.
