

The vigil

CLOCKWISE FROM UPPER LEFT: Grim, determined students begin to come alive after their all-night wait for Bruce Springsteen tickets; three campers "sleep in" in their makeshift bed under a bike rack; the mad rush begins when the HUB doors are unlocked; students welcome the photographer to a night-time lawn party.

About 500 people camped out around the HUB Monday night to get first crack at tickets for the Bruce Springsteen concert. Most of the people were equipped with sleeping bags, books, lanterns and a six-pack or two of their favorite brew to face the chilly night in anticipation of the April 13 concert at Rec Hall.

The campers were blessed with clear skies, although the temperature dipped to cool 30 degrees. One student remarked, "I just hope it doesn't snow."

Blankets and sleeping bags were spread out from the HUB front doors all the way to the front of Grange. At 1 a.m. the crowd was in a festive mood as a lone minstrel played the alma mater on an accordion.

First in line when the doors opened at 6:30 a.m. was Scott Dinner (3rd-accounting) who said, "It (the wait) was worthwhile as long as I got a ticket. I've seen him twice before. He's great, fantastic." Several students said that they planned to buy the maximum number of tickets (four) and scalp them, but all said they were going to the concert, too.

The vigil seemed to have other rewards besides the tickets. Most of the campers said they were enjoying the experience. One student, Jeff Ginsburg (9th-environmental resource management) said, "It was pretty rowdy for a while. It was a lot of fun."

According to a HUB employee, the 5,500 tickets were sold out by 11:45 a.m. yesterday, with most students buying four.
