

Pope chooses more cardinals

VATICAN CITY (UPI) — Pope Paul VI created 21 new cardinals yesterday, including two he did not name and one American, making the youngest and most international college in the history of the Roman Catholic church.

For the first time, all of the 19 named cardinals-elect were born in the 20th Century. Their average age was 61.

Among the new princes of the church, who will be given their red hats and rings of office in a colorful consistory May 24, were two U.S.-born prelates: Archbishop William Wakefield Baum, 49, a Dallas native who is archbishop of Washington, and Opilio Rossi, 66, an Italian citizen who was born in New York and is currently apostolic nuncio or ambassador to Austria.

The Pope also said he had chosen two other cardinals "in pectore" (in his breast). The names of these cardinals may be announced at any time the Pope wishes, but lose the title if they are not named before the pontiff's death.

Elevation of the 19 named new church princes in the consistory will bring to 136 the membership of the college of cardinals, the select church body which for centuries has been charged with the election of popes.

Of these, 118 will be under the age of 80 and therefore eligible to vote for Paul's successor.

In his last consistory in March 1973, the Pope named 30 new cardinals to create the largest college at 145 members.

Since then, death has reduced the membership to 117 and only 99 of them are still under 80 and eligible to vote for the next pontiff.

The new cardinals will make the college more international. Four of the new princes come from Africa, four from the Americas, two from Asia, two from Europe and one from the South Pacific. Only three are Italian nationals.

The new cardinals also made the college the youngest in its history. The youngest is Archbishop Jaime L. Sin, 47, of Manila, and the oldest is Msgr. Boleslaw Filipiak, 74, Polish dean of the Sacred Roman Rota, the church's judicial tribunal.

Portuguese Democrats threaten coalition

LISBON, Portugal (UPI) — The Socialists' left-wing partner in Portugal's caretaker government yesterday threatened to quit the country's ruling coalition unless it is realigned to reflect this week's election results.

Portugal's conservatives, who scored the largest gains in Sunday's vote for a national assembly — the first free parliamentary election in 50 years — opposed any threat to provoke a government crisis until a new president is chosen June 27. The Socialists, who ranked first in the voting but fell short of a majority in the 263-seat legislature, said they would ignore their coalition partners and form a minority government including independents and military officers once a president is elected.

They rejected any immediate change in their existing coalition with the left-of-center Popular Democrats and the Communists.

"Our party's permanence in the government has been compromised," Popular Democratic leader Francisco Sa Carneiro said at a news conference.

He summoned his party's national executive to Lisbon to discuss possible withdrawal from the center-left coalition and said, "We will make our decision this week."
