

Kremlin names defense chief

MOSCOW (UPI) — The Kremlin yesterday named Dmitri F. Ustinov, a hardline arms industry expert, to replace Marshal Andrei A. Grechko as the Soviet Union's defense minister.

In what Western experts described as a surprising choice, the 67-year-old Ustinov was selected ahead of two of Grechko's deputies, both serving military men.

Elevated just last month to a job on the ruling Politburo, Ustinov was considered for the defense ministry job in 1967 when Grechko was selected and has been linked with the military establishment throughout his career.

For the past several years he has been the civilian overseer of the Soviet defense industry in his capacity as a member of the Communist party secretariat. Among the Western experts he has a reputation as an ultra-efficient organizer.

"Efficiency is the one thing about him that is really notable," one expert said.

"He is a man who can produce well-made arms when the Kremlin wants them. You can see that by the improved quality of weapons in this country in recent years."

Ustinov also has had connections with the Soviet space program, especially in the development of rocket technology, and was awarded a Hammer and Sickle gold medal for that work in 1961.

The surprise appointment came only hours after the top

Soviet leadership, led by a weeping party secretary Leonid I. Brezhnev, paid final tribute to Grechko, the man who built Russia's modern military might in nine years as defense minister.

Grechko died unexpectedly Monday of a heart attack at age 72.

Ustinov was one of the eulogists at Grechko's funeral and was the man who placed the late defense minister's ashes in a niche in the Kremlin wall.

Album prices drop

Prices on popular LP's in State College's record stores have dropped in the last three months due to the entry of an undercutting competitor.

The new store, Schoolkids Records, has been selling the plastic discs for $3.99 apiece since moving in on February 4.

These relatively low prices have, in turn, forced down record prices in State College's other major record stores, according to employees of Discount Records and The Record Bar.

The following is a price survey of the major local record stores taken this week. The albums are the top selling ones in order according to the May 1, 1976 issue of Billboard magazine.

Nuclear reactor facilities to be displayed

The Breazeale Nuclear Reactor facility on campus will hold an open house from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. tomorrow.

Visitors will have a first-hand look at the one-megawatt research reactor in operation. The pool housing and reactor core can also be examined. Explanations of nuclear fission and reactor operation will be given as visitors observe the control room and the reactor operators.

Other facilities such as the hot cells, the cobalt-60 pool, the neutron activation analysis laboratory and the radiographic techniques laboratory can also be seen.

George Geisler, research associate of nuclear engineering, said that the facility is not a power reactor, but is used for training purposes and research.

Research projects on display will include the new imaging techniques using x-rays and gamma rays and neutrons used to detect certain heart diseases.

Other developments include techniques for monitoring environmental pollution, air-borne pollution and radioactive emissions from nuclear plants.

Geisler said the University's first reactor was put into operation in 1955 after William M. Breazeale came from Oak Ridge, Tenn., to design the reactor. Breazeale was also the first professor of nuclear engineering at the University from 1952 to 1958.

The reactor core installed then was replaced about 11 years ago by the current one, Geisler said.

Geisler said the facility accepts visitors anytime, not just during the annual open house.

Career information will be available to high school and commonwealth campus students. Transportation will be provided every half-hour from the parking lot behind Mechanical Engineering Building to the reactor.
