

Frat hazing case ruled on by IFC

By LEAH ROZEN
Collegian Staff Writer
The Inter-Fraternity Council's Board of Control pulled the plug on social activities at Alpha Kappa Lambda fraternity until Oct. 7, putting the fraternity on IFC probation.

The ruling came at Wednesday night's hearing on charges of physical hazing brought against the fraternity by one of its members, Michael Seibert (12th-biology).

EEC info planned for workshop series

The Council for Exceptional Children (CEC) will sponsor a series of workshops tomorrow to acquaint students from Commonwealth Campuses and all other interested students with the education of exceptional children major.

The program topics follow:

- 10 to 11:15 a.m., physical activities for exceptional children in Rec Hall.
- 11:30 a.m. to 12:45 p.m., sex education for exceptional children in 111 Chambers.
- 1 to 2:15 p.m., film: "Like Other Children," with discussion to follow in 107 Chambers.

-2:30 to 3:45 p.m., sensitivity workshop in 109 Chambers.

-4 to 4:15 p.m., exceptional children and literature in 107 Chambers.

IFC probation consists of a strong reprimand, a weekly check of the house and a moratorium on sponsoring social functions or having more than half of the house members attend another fraternity's social functions.

It also removes the privileges of attending or participating in Greek functions and intramural sports.

According to IFC regulations, social privileges will be reinstated for tomorrow's Mother's Day and Alumni Homecoming celebrations.

Probation was the strongest action the Board of Control could take, with the exception of expulsion, which IFC would ask Raymond Murphy, vice president for student affairs to remove the fraternity's charter.

Besides putting Alpha Kappa Lambda on probation, the board ordered the fraternity to reimburse Seibert for any medical expenses incurred from the incident.

Seibert charged that he bruised his ribs and suffered other injuries while taking part in a fraternity ritual to celebrate his giving his fraternity pin to his girlfriend. The celebration, held April 19, included tying Seibert and pelting him with garbage, a trip to a creek near Whipple's Dam where he was dunked in water and, finally, a two-mile run down Tussey Mountain.

"It's all done in good fun," Alpha Kappa Lambda President Joe Borrelli said yesterday, expressing surprise at the severity of the decision.

The ritual has "housewide acceptance," Borrelli said. "It's a risk that everybody takes. Care is taken that nobody gets hurt."

Borrelli compared the ceremony to a friar's roast, saying it was simply "a bunch of rowdy guys getting together to have a good time."

"I respect every member on that Board of Control," Borrelli said, "but I think that decision stinks. We (Alpha Kappa Lambda) are the perfect scapegoat, since we have both a high academic average and a no-hazing policy."

Borrelli said his fraternity planned to appeal the ruling. To do that, 25 or more of the 49 Penn State fraternity presidents must sign a petition asking the Board of Control to reconsider its decision.

Legalization in 10 years

New pot law predicted

By LAURA SHEMICK
Collegian Staff Writer

Pennsylvania will probably adopt a legalization of marijuana law within the next 10 years, according to Alan Ellis, counsel for the National Organization for the Reform of Marijuana Laws (NORML).

Ellis spoke last night at a "Development of Drug Usage and Legality" program in the HUB Assembly Room, sponsored by the Penn State chapter of NORML and On Drugs, Inc. Ellis was a member of a four-man panel that discussed the history of marijuana laws and their possible future in Pennsylvania.

Ellis said Pennsylvania will adopt new laws within 10 years because of the increasing liberalization of the marijuana laws in other states and because of lack of proof that marijuana has any harmful effects.

According to the panelists, anti-marijuana legislation began in this country with the Marijuana Tax Act, enacted in the 30's. It was brought to Congress and pushed into law by an out-of-work Prohibition agent named Harry Anslinger of Hollidaysburg.

Anslinger faced unemployment with the repeal of Prohibition and decided that he could find work in the field of marijuana law enforcement, Ellis said.

Ellis said Anslinger was responsible for early anti-marijuana propaganda such as "Reefer Madness" and the term "killer weed."

Marijuana use stayed out of sight until the 60's, when it became the trademark of the anti-war activists and hippies, Ellis said. Then the 70's brought the health controversy concerning marijuana use into the picture.

According to Ellis, the U.S. Department of Health, Education and Welfare said the use of marijuana is "less dangerous than alcohol."

"Smoking marijuana has the same effects that any smoking has on a person," Ellis said. "And the Jamaica study (a recent study of heavy marijuana users in Jamaica) shows that marijuana has no bad effects on users."

Another panel member, Dick Hamilton, of the Governor's Council on Drug and Alcohol abuse, gave the council's views on the proposed new marijuana law at the discussion. The council actively supported the original bill, which would have reduced the possession of marijuana to a summary offense and a fine, he said, and now supports the amended bill. The new bill specifies that possession of less than 30 grams of marijuana or less than 8 grams of hashish be considered a summary offense, punishable by a maximum $100 fine.

Steve Rudman, founder of PSORML, told the audience they must go out and tell elected officials where they stood on this issue. "There are 13 million marijuana smokers in the United States," he said. "This ridiculous law must be changed."

Sam Hargrave, a member of On Drugs, Inc., said the staff philosophy on drugs is "to let people know what they're putting into their lungs—but we let them

make the decisions themselves."

Ellis said he endorsed the legalization of marijuana, because "it's going to happen eventually" and because he is "for quality control."

PSORML, he said, sees itself as a consumer advocate for marijuana control after it is legalized.

The panel discussed various parts of the Pennsylvania pot laws and spoke at length about the new drug education programs being initiated in the state.

Police Log

State College police Tuesday issued four theft citations.

One person was cited for stealing a pair of white painter's pants, valued at $7.99 from Jim's Army-Navy Store, 230 S. Allen St.

Two persons were apprehended for stealing two yo-yos, valued at $2.81, from Hills Department Store, Hills Plaza.

Police also cited an unidentified person for stealing a Mother's Day card, worth 80 cents, from McLanahan's 414 E. College Ave.

Bicentennial rallies discussed

Two visiting groups at last night's University Coalition meeting discussed Fourth of July rallies being held in Washington and Philadelphia.

Phil Cushway, speaker for the group, said the organization's goal is to have "an economic system that is run like a democracy," and to push for "employee ownership and control."

The People's Bicentennial Commission (PBC) discussed their Fourth of July rally for a democratic

economy, which will be held in Washington, D.C.

Agreement was reached on contract language for supplemental workers' compensation and supplemental unemployment benefits, according to URW President Pete Bonmarino.

Agreement was reached on contract language for supplemental workers' compensation and supplemental unemployment benefits, according to URW President Pete Bonmarino.

Phil Cushway, speaker for the group, said the organization's goal is to have "an economic system that is run like a democracy," and to push for "employee ownership and control."

The People's Bicentennial Commission (PBC) discussed their Fourth of July rally for a democratic

economy, which will be held in Washington, D.C.

Phil Cushway, speaker for the group, said the organization's goal is to have "an economic system that is run like a democracy," and to push for "employee ownership and control."

The People's Bicentennial Commission (PBC) discussed their Fourth of July rally for a democratic

economy, which will be held in Washington, D.C.

Phil Cushway, speaker for the group, said the organization's goal is to have "an economic system that is run like a democracy," and to push for "employee ownership and control."

The People's Bicentennial Commission (PBC) discussed their Fourth of July rally for a democratic

economy, which will be held in Washington, D.C.

Phil Cushway, speaker for the group, said the organization's goal is to have "an economic system that is run like a democracy," and to push for "employee ownership and control."

The People's Bicentennial Commission (PBC) discussed their Fourth of July rally for a democratic

economy, which will be held in Washington, D.C.

Phil Cushway, speaker for the group, said the organization's goal is to have "an economic system that is run like a democracy," and to push for "employee ownership and control."

The People's Bicentennial Commission (PBC) discussed their Fourth of July rally for a democratic

economy, which will be held in Washington, D.C.

Phil Cushway, speaker for the group, said the organization's goal is to have "an economic system that is run like a democracy," and to push for "employee ownership and control."

The People's Bicentennial Commission (PBC) discussed their Fourth of July rally for a democratic

economy, which will be held in Washington, D.C.

Phil Cushway, speaker for the group, said the organization's goal is to have "an economic system that is run like a democracy," and to push for "employee ownership and control."

The People's Bicentennial Commission (PBC) discussed their Fourth of July rally for a democratic

economy, which will be held in Washington, D.C.

Phil Cushway, speaker for the group, said the organization's goal is to have "an economic system that is run like a democracy," and to push for "employee ownership and control."

The People's Bicentennial Commission (PBC) discussed their Fourth of July rally for a democratic

economy, which will be held in Washington, D.C.

Phil Cushway, speaker for the group, said the organization's goal is to have "an economic system that is run like a democracy," and to push for "employee ownership and control."

The People's Bicentennial Commission (PBC) discussed their Fourth of July rally for a democratic

economy, which will be held in Washington, D.C.

Phil Cushway, speaker for the group, said the organization's goal is to have "an economic system that is run like a democracy," and to push for "employee ownership and control."

The People's Bicentennial Commission (PBC) discussed their Fourth of July rally for a democratic

economy, which will be held in Washington, D.C.

Phil Cushway, speaker for the group, said the organization's goal is to have "an economic system that is run like a democracy," and to push for "employee ownership and control."

The People's Bicentennial Commission (PBC) discussed their Fourth of July rally for a democratic

economy, which will be held in Washington, D.C.

Phil Cushway, speaker for the group, said the organization's goal is to have "an economic system that is run like a democracy," and to push for "employee ownership and control."

The People's Bicentennial Commission (PBC) discussed their Fourth of July rally for a democratic

economy, which will be held in Washington, D.C.

Phil Cushway, speaker for the group, said the organization's goal is to have "an economic system that is run like a democracy," and to push for "employee ownership and control."

The People's Bicentennial Commission (PBC) discussed their Fourth of July rally for a democratic

economy, which will be held in Washington, D.C.

Phil Cushway, speaker for the group, said the organization's goal is to have "an economic system that is run like a democracy," and to push for "employee ownership and control."

The People's Bicentennial Commission (PBC) discussed their Fourth of July rally for a democratic

economy, which will be held in Washington, D.C.

Phil Cushway, speaker for the group, said the organization's goal is to have "an economic system that is run like a democracy," and to push for "employee ownership and control."

The People's Bicentennial Commission (PBC) discussed their Fourth of July rally for a democratic

economy, which will be held in Washington, D.C.

Phil Cushway, speaker for the group, said the organization's goal is to have "an economic system that is run like a democracy," and to push for "employee ownership and control."

The People's Bicentennial Commission (PBC) discussed their Fourth of July rally for a democratic

economy, which will be held in Washington, D.C.

Phil Cushway, speaker for the group, said the organization's goal is to have "an economic system that is run like a democracy," and to push for "employee ownership and control."

The People's Bicentennial Commission (PBC) discussed their Fourth of July rally for a democratic

economy, which will be held in Washington, D.C.

Phil Cushway, speaker for the group, said the organization's goal is to have "an economic system that is run like a democracy," and to push for "employee ownership and control."

The People's Bicentennial Commission (PBC) discussed their Fourth of July rally for a democratic

economy, which will be held in Washington, D.C.

Phil Cushway, speaker for the group, said the organization's goal is to have "an economic system that is run like a democracy," and to push for "employee ownership and control."

The People's Bicentennial Commission (PBC) discussed their Fourth of July rally for a democratic

economy, which will be held in Washington, D.C.

Phil Cushway, speaker for the group, said the organization's goal is to have "an economic system that is run like a democracy," and to push for "employee ownership and control."

The People's Bicentennial Commission (PBC) discussed their Fourth of July rally for a democratic

economy, which will be held in Washington, D.C.

Phil Cushway, speaker for the group, said the organization's goal is to have "an economic system that is run like a democracy," and to push for "employee ownership and control."

The People's Bicentennial Commission (PBC) discussed their Fourth of July rally for a democratic

economy, which will be held in Washington, D.C.

Phil Cushway, speaker for the group, said the organization's goal is to have "an economic system that is run like a democracy," and to push for "employee ownership and control."

The People's Bicentennial Commission (PBC) discussed their Fourth of July rally for a democratic

economy, which will be held in Washington, D.C.

Phil Cushway, speaker for the group, said the organization's goal is to have "an economic system that is run like a democracy," and to push for "employee ownership and control."

The People's Bicentennial Commission (PBC) discussed their Fourth of July rally for a democratic

economy, which will be held in Washington, D.C.

Phil Cushway, speaker for the group, said the organization's goal is to have "an economic system that is run like a democracy," and to push for "employee ownership and control."

The People's Bicentennial Commission (PBC) discussed their Fourth of July rally for a democratic

economy, which will be held in Washington, D.C.

<p