House staffers deny leak

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Sixteen former staff members of the House intelligence committee testified yesterday they did not know who supplied a copy of their panel's secret report to CBS correspondent Daniel Schorr.

Another staff member was asked to give his testimony in closed session before the House Ethics Committee, which is in the fifth month of a $135,000 investigation of the leak.

The former staff members of the now defunct intelligence panel were subpoenaed by the ethics committee in what appears to be a final effort to determine how the document was obtained by Schorr.

Rep. John J. Flynt, D-Ga., chairman of the ethics committee, set another hearing for next Tuesday, presumably concerning the testimony of James C. Minge III, the witness who appeared at the closed session.

Schorr and three journalists connected with the Village Voice have been ordered to appear the following day. Schorr has said he would appear but would not disclose how the document came into his hands.

Joseph A. Califano, Schorr's lawyer, sent a letter to Flynt yesterday requesting that the committee identify portions of the report which were regarded as classified and whose publication seven months ago were deemed to have endangered national security.

"At stake in these hearings for our nation is the precious constitutional right of the press to gather and publish information and the sacred right of the American people to be informed of its government's activities," Califano said.

"At stake ... for Daniel Schorr is the possibility that the House will hold him in contempt and that he could be imprisoned for his activities as a professional journalist executing his First Amendment rights and fulfilling his First Amendment responsibilities."

Flynt had no comment on the letter but said it would be answered in due course.

The House had voted to bar publication of the report on grounds it contained classified information that could endanger national security.

Much of the report, however, was printed verbatim in New York's Village Voice newspaper. Schorr, since temporarily suspended by CBS, admitted he passed the report to the newspaper and the House ordered the Ethics Committee to determine who gave it to him.

During open hearings yesterday, 12 witnesses testified they had not given Schorr the report and did not know how he got it.

All previous witnesses from the intelligence committee, Congress, the executive branch and the CIA itself have said essentially the same thing.

On Aug. 25, the committee voted to subpoena Schorr for testimony next week — setting up a direct clash between the legal principles of freedom of the press and Congress' right to investigate.

Schorr has said he will honor the subpoena but will not disclose the source of the leak under any circumstances.

Solzhenitsyn given visa to live in U.S.

WASHINGTON (UPI) — State Department officials said yesterday Soviet historian-novelist Alexander Solzhenitsyn has decided to take up residence in the United States and has been granted a permanent visa.

Solzhenitsyn, who was deported from the Soviet Union, had been living in Zurich, Switzerland. State Department officials said he entered the United States under normal immigration procedures via Canada.

The officials said the visa covered the writer, his wife and their four children. It means that he can remain in the United States permanently and can apply for U.S. citizenship.

Solzhenitsyn was expelled from the Soviet Union two and a half years ago. Since then, he has lectured widely, including appearances in the United States.

His first visit to the United States in 1975 caused a political storm for the Ford administration when Secretary of State Henry Kissinger recommended that he not be invited to the White House because it might damage relations between Moscow and Washington.

State Department officials said the novelist did not want the location of his new home in the United States to be made public, so that his privacy could be protected.

It was learned that he will be living somewhere in New England.
