Kissinger says Africa heading toward peace

UNITED NATIONS. N.Y. (AP) — Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger declared yesterday that southern Africa is on a course toward peace and racial justice but outside powers "fueling the flames of war and racial hatred" could "doom opportunities that might never return."

Kissinger, making his annual speech before the U.N. General Assembly, peppered the review of world affairs with thrusts. at the Soviet Union.

He said the United States is disturbed by the continuing accumulation of Russian arms and, in an obvious reference to stances of military intervention to tip the scales in local conflicts in distant continents.

The future of mankind requires coexistence between the superpowers, Kissinger said, but restraint must be reciprocated and global--"There can be no selective detente.

Besides the evident irritation with Moscow, he jabbed at the Third World for bloc voting and a widespread tendency "to come here for battle rather than negotiation." If these trends persist, Kissinger said, "the hope for world prehensive program for nuclear controls to be announced shortly by President Ford would have as its goal restoring the atom "as a boon and not a menace to mankind."

Kissinger also expressed U.S. support for a West German proposal to confront terrorism and, in the economic area, offered increased aid and other remedial measures for nations facing severe debt burdens.

Bill will speed Alaskan gas

WASHINGTON (UPI)-The House passed a bill yesterday to speed the day when Alaskan natural gas can flow to the "lower 48" states.

The Senate passed its version earlier and the two would have to be reconciled in conference before the weekend for any chance of passage before Congress adiourns.

Center has a volunteer on duty who has been trained in listening skills and crisis intervention. It also maintains files which can be used in the office and a lending library on women's concerns.

Provides information, referrals

The two other services provided by the center are personal support groups and workshops. The support groups are geared to the specific needs, interests, backgrounds and lifestyles of the women involved, Miller said.

"I think support is the key word," Miller said.

According to Miller, the groups enable women to dévelop close friendships with other women which help them help each other. Recent groups have been organized for divorced, separated and widowed women, she said.

The groups are led by facilitators, Miller said, women who have been trained by the Center in communicating and working with groups.

The workshops provide another means for women to help each other through sharing skills and knowledge on matters such as auto repair, money management and health, Miller said. Possible upcoming programs include auto repair. household repair, assertiveness training and a jobs workshop.

All these services are available to both campus and community women, according to Miller.

"We want to serve both," she said.

Although the Center was founded by women from the University, women from the community also have become invloved, Miller said. Many of them became interested through the support group for women in their middle years last spring, Miller said. The Center's membership is now about evenly divided between community and campus members, she said.

To reach more women, the Center has developed a speaker service.

Center offers variety of services Groups desiring more information can contact the Center and a speaker will be provided, according to Miller.

> Although it is designed for women, the Center welcomes male members, Miller said. However, they work as committee members, not as volun-the teers, Miller said, because women calling or visiting the Center expect help from a woman.

> While the services are provided free of charge, the Center relies on contributions for financial support, Miller said. Members are asked to contribute $12 a year for which they receive a newsletter. Businesses are asked to contribute $35 a year.

The money is used for operating, expenses, according to Miller. The staff is all volunteer. The Center is hoping to gain funding to hire a fulltime paid director, Miller said. It also is looking into the possibility of University and federal funds for support, according to Miller. It is planning a raffle during October, she said.
