Exam complaints to be studied

By JAN SEAMAN

Professors are not permitted to give anything but quizzes and "narrowly limited tests" during the last week of classes, according to University policy.

"Most instructors are following the policy," Undergraduate Student Government Academic Assembly President Joe Taglieri said. "However, there are a number who are giving comprehensive examinations and are calling them something else."

Taglieri said even if an instructor calls a comprehensive or semi-comprehensive final by another name he still must adhere to the University's policy.

"The name is not important. The content is," he said.

If a student feels he is responsible for more material than he should be for a test administered during the last week of classes, he should contact the Academic Assembly or the department head, Taglieri said.

Tomorrow, Academic Assembly members will be in 203-A HUB from 9 to 5 to take complaints about comprehensive exams during the last week of classes.

Taglieri said complaints also will be accepted by phone at 865-9111.

Complaints will be strictly confidential, he said. "No student names will be taken. We want the professor's name, course and section numbers, why the student feels the instructor is violating the rule and whether the instructor is providing options for students," Taglieri said one option could be taking the final during the final period or on the last day of class.

Taglieri said Academic Assembly has received several complaints concerning the policy. He said students have reported term projects (given instead of a final examination) assigned to be due on the last day of class.

"Term projects in lieu of final exams are not due until the first day of the final examination period," he said.

According to Taglieri, every complaint will be investigated. He said the information is being gathered because Robert Dunham, vice president for Undergraduate Studies, asked his Academic Assembly advisory committee whether instructors were following the policy.

Letters will be sent to the department heads of instructors violating the policy, Taglieri said. He said individual student councils probably will receive the instructors' names and will "be in charge of the matter."

"Since the instructors are violating University policy, the University also can enforce the policy," he said.

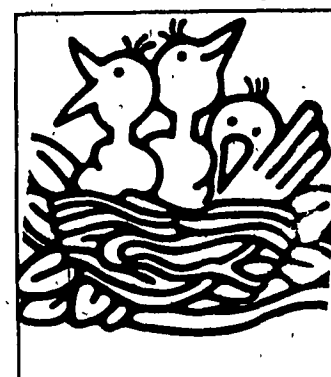

Record occupancy crowds dormitories

The number of undergraduates living in residence halls is the largest ever at the University according to Otto Mueller, assistant vice president for housing and food service operations.

The increased housing was made possible by the changing of some room capacities in residence halls, which increased the students housed on campus from 12,617 to 13,237.

At the opening of Fall Term, 354 students were assigned temporary quarters, a procedure followed every year to increase the housing capacity and to help prevent room vacancies as the term progresses.

By the end of last month, fewer than 100 of the 354 students were still in the temporary housing.

Swine flu inoculations for 40,000 University faculty, staff and students will begin at the HUB ballroom Nov. 8, according to Dr. Robert Wirag of the Health Education Office.

Wirag said the inoculation program will last until Nov. 15 and will be set up on an alphabetical schedule similar to registration (see table).

The inoculation program will be part of Phase Two of the Pennsylvania Department of Health's Statewide Influenza Immunization Campaign. Phase Two is designed for the general adult population, while Phase One was aimed at medical high risk groups.

The Phase Two vaccine will contain killed A New Jersey (swine flu) viruses. It will not provide protection against other forms of influenza.

Dr. John A. Hargleroad II, director of University Health Services, said timing was a critical concern for University officials. Phase Two inoculations in Centre County will not begin until after Nov. 15, and Hargleroad said that because of final exams that would be "a heck of a week" to start the program.

Wirag added that those who are allergic to eggs and egg products, or who have a high fever, should not be inoculated. Hemophiliacs and others with bleeding disorders, or who are on anticoagulant therapy, should see a private physician. Also, anyone who has had a previous regular flu shot should wait at least 14 days before getting the swine flu shot.

Dr. Leonard Bachman, Pennsylvania Secretary of Health, said it takes from 10 days to three weeks after vaccination to develop protection, and the protection lasts from 12 to 15 months. He added that five to six per cent of people older than 25 who are vaccinated develop no protection at all.

Dr. Bachman also said it was impossible to contract flu from the vaccine, because it contains a killed virus, and that no serious side effects are expected for anyone. The vaccine will pose no complications for pregnant women, or those taking steroids or other immunosuppressive agents. No drugs are incompatible with the vaccine.

The immunization program will be open only to those 18 years of age and older. According to Hargleroad, those under 18 should receive a split virus vaccine, while those over 18 should receive a whole virus vaccine. Only the whole virus vaccine will be available at the HUB. Hargleroad said those under 18 who wish to be inoculated should check with their family doctor.

Wirag strongly urged people to come for their inoculation at the scheduled time. He said they would be attempting to immunize 600 people an hour on a tight schedule with one gun and that if more people showed up than expected, the whole schedule would get jammed up. He added that anyone who cannot be at the HUB at their scheduled time should arrange to be inoculated at home.

University President John W. Oswald announced that employees would be released from their regular duties when necessary, to receive the vaccine.

Wirag said volunteer manpower for the program would be provided by the Ritenour Health Center's Student Advisory Board, The Student Nurses Association, the Alpha Phi Omega service fraternity and the Gamma Sigma Sigma service sorority.

Copies of the inoculation schedule will be available at the front desk of the HUB and the Ritenour Health Center. They also will be distributed to Resident Assistants, academic deans, and heads of administrative divisions, and will be published by the Penn State Intercom and Penn State Reporter.
