Current family status examined

NEW YORK (UPI) — The march of women into the paid labor force in America demonstrates the need for reforms in work structures and family policy, Alan Pifer, President of the Carnegie Corporation of New York said yesterday.

Pifer called for the government and the private sector to study work and family life as it affects women, men, and children. He recommended development of policies that would encourage: — Flexibility in life patterns so men and women can alternate periods of study, employment, work in the home, and leisure throughout their life.

— Provision of adequate daycare and afterschool care arrangements for children.

— Creation of a family support system to assure those with incomes well below the national medium a decent standard of living "without the indignities of welfare."

Nearly half of all American women are working or looking for a job. Females now make up approximately 41 per cent of the labor force.

In contrast to earlier times, most working women are married with husbands present. They have school-age children.

But Pifer said a high proportion who are single, separated, widowed, or divorced also have young children.

"This reflects the startling fact that over the past decade, families headed by women on their own have grown 10 times as fast as the two-parent family," he said.

"There are no signs that these trends will be reversed. Women must work. They want to work."

Pifer said that continued failure to take account of the effects of women's rising labor force participation may cause "hardship and inequity for increasing numbers of people."

Weather change reduces unemployment

HARRISBURG (AP) — The end of the cold weather has taken some of the chill off the state's unemployment rate, which dropped half a percent last month.

March's unemployment rate was 7.3 per cent, down from 7.8 per cent in February, the state Department of Labor and Industry said yesterday.

THE ADVENTURES OF

RUTHERFORD & FRIENDS

"Unreal!" Rutherford mumbled under his breath. "Here I am, a brilliant psychology major, on the verge of a great career; yet I have to play handyman, just to make enough money to eat . . . Not that I have anything against manual labor — that is, as long as I'm not the one doing the labor."

And so went Rutherford's part-time job fixing up apartments for his friend Ferdinand. "I hope that Ferdinand pays me well" thought Rutherford. "I'm almost down to my last nickel."

(But . . . little did Rutherford know what Ferdinand would have in store for him when the job was through. Watch for Rutherford in Friday's Collegian to find out!!!)
