

'Money' campaign set

By TERRY MELLOR
Daily Collegian Staff Writer

A fake money campaign will be held statewide during the week of Nov. 13-19 at state colleges to dramatize the financial impact university and college students have on local communities.

The "Campus Cash" campaign consists of students and faculty members passing a "Campus Cash Dollar" to local merchants along with the actual payment for any purchase made off-campus.

The Pennsylvania campuses that will participate in this campaign are Indiana University and the state colleges at Bloomsburg, California, Cheney, Clarion, East Stroudsburg, Edinboro, Kutztown, Lock Haven, Mansfield, Millersville, Shippensburg, Slippery Rock and West Chester.

The program is sponsored by the Commonwealth Association of Students (CAS) and the Association of Pennsylvania State Colleges and University Faculties. The teacher's association will provide the funds to print the half-million dollars' worth of fake money, CAS associate director Michael Sommers said.

Program leaders hope that area merchants will fight for increased state college and university appropriations after the Campus Cash program is over.

"We need to show the college towns how much they depend on our state colleges and universities," Sommers said.

"When the townspeople realize the impact students and faculty have on their livelihood, we think they will support our efforts for better state appropriations and in our fight to stop tuition hikes," he said.

The message on the "Campus Cash Dollar" reads: WHEN TUITION IS INCREASED: Fewer students can afford higher education, fewer dollars get spent in this community, and I would not be here to make this purchase.

The message on the phony dollar urges merchants to write their state senators and representatives for increased funding for the Pennsylvania state colleges and universities.

The reverse side of the bill is blank so the consumer can list the total amount of their purchase. This is necessary, Sommers said, to let the merchant know exactly how much money at the week's end is spent by the campus community in local business.

"The impact of the Campus Cash campaign will be lessened if people forget to write the total on the back of the bill," Sommers said.

Local CAS committee members are meeting now with representatives of the teachers association on the campuses to determine the best ways to distribute and publicize the Campus Cash campaign so as many students and faculty as possible will participate, he said.

PSU football expenditures under state investigation

The state auditor general's staff is continuing a "complete investigation" into public relations expenditures of Penn State, the University of Pittsburgh, and Temple, according to the Sunday Harrisburg Patriot News.

The audit, a spokesman for Auditor General Al Benedict said, has uncovered notations in the University's accounts of football game tickets and other entertainment gifts given to certain legislators and top state officials, the newspaper reported.

Jim Graci, a spokesman for the state auditor general, said Friday that the audit is still in process and will be finished sometime in the future.

Fredrick Ciletti, University special assistant to the president for governmental affairs, refused to comment on the issue because he would have to criticize an elected public official, who possibly would be "vindictive."

Although Ciletti said the University's actions were both "good and honorable," he added that "when you're dealing with elected public officials, you just can't win."
