Lantern features student activities

A new flame is burning among campus publications which promises to give more light to University student issues and activities. It's called the Lantern.

The newspaper was first published Jan. 24 and according to editor Brian Callahan (11th-political science) the Lantern will be issued as a biweekly tabloid Spring Term starting March 23.

Callahan said the idea for the newspaper started developing the middle of Fall Term and was based on a 1976 general campus survey by the Undergraduate Student Government Department of Communications: He said there was also general concern from student organizations about the coverage they were receiving.

The results of the survey showed that the average student felt The Daily Collegian was a good student newspaper but that an independent supplement on student activities was needed, he said.

"This is the gap we are trying to fill," Callahan said. "We don't want to compete with the Collegian. I consider the Collegian one of the best daily college newspapers."

Callahan said when the USG conducted the survey, they were considering putting out a newspaper. But when he took over as editor, Callahan said he told the USG he did not want to be a part of the organization. The USG also found it would not be feasible to publish a paper, he said.

"We don't want to be a part of USG. We would lose all objectivity reporting on USG," he said.

However, Callahan said the Lantern got a $70 loan from the USG Senate to help them cover publishing costs on the first issue.

"Publishing costs were not covered by advertisements in the first issue because people do not want to advertise in an untried product," he said.

The Lantern will have advertisements for the next issue and will have funds to begin repaying the loan, Callahan said.

The focus of the paper is to report on Penn State and national student issues, organizations and activities in a feature format, he said.

The Lantern, which is printed by Himes Publishing Co., will be distributed at the same spots where the Collegian and Turning Point are distributed at, he said. The paper, which has a circulation of 10,000, will be distributed in the morning and is free to all students.

Currently, the Lantern's office is located in 104A Waring and has 31 staff writers that write on a voluntary basis.

A good percentage of the writers are journalism and advertising majors, Callahan said, but the Lantern still needs more qualified writers and photographers.

By the next issue, he said, the paper hopes to have a faculty adviser and by next year, the Lantern hopes to be publishing every week.

Five kegs stolen from fraternity

• Michael Scott (5th-science) reported the theft of beer from Sigma Alpha Epsilon fraternity, 200 E. Beaver Ave., at 4:08 a.m. Saturday, State College police said. Scott said five kegs, worth about $120, were missing from the back porch of the building.

• Four persons climbed over a fence at the ice rink to skate and were discovered by an officer checking area at 2:09 a.m. yesterday, University Police Services said.
