Froth prints Collegian parody

Before reading the rest of this newspaper, you had better check to make sure you have the right one.

The Daily Collusion, a parody of The Daily Collegian published by the campus humor magazine, Froth, is scheduled to come out today and is being distributed free at the same locations as the Collegian — "to add to the confusion and gain hilarity," Froth co-editor-in-chief Bob "Suds" Carville said.

"It's not deliberately an attack (on the Collegian and its staff)," Carville said. "It's more of a satire — not with an attempt to harm."

This issue is the third Collegian parody and the second one to be called the Collusion, Carville said. He said the next publication printed by Froth will be its regular magazine, since Froth is "not in the business of publishing Collusions."

Carville said it will be up to future Froth editors to decide whether the Collusion will become an annual publication.

Study group re-locates in Pa.

The national office of an organization that studies volunteer participation and citizen involvement has moved from Boulder, Col. to the University. John McLoughlin, executive director of the Association of Volunteer Scholars said the organization provides a network for members to contribute to the literature of citizen participation.

The association is part of the institute for the Study of Human Development, a research facility of the College of Human Development.

Drew Hyman, associate director of the institute said the association will provide access to the research group, and will allow faculty members to work with the association to develop research.

A national conference on citizens' advocacy and ombudsmen is already being planned by the association and the College of Human Development.

Important dates to remember

Although registration is over, there are several other important dates students should keep in mind.

March 19 is the late registration deadline. The class drop and course repeat deadlines are March 28. March 28 is also the last day to preregister for Summer Term classes. The late class drop period ends May 2. Students can register to take courses under the pass-fail option March 26 to 28.

The last day of Spring Term classes is May 16. Commencement is May 26.

New municipal numbers

The new number to call to reach the State College municipal offices is 234-7100. The State College police business number has been changed to 234-7150.

Two more communities now use the Centre Region's central telephone number to call for police, fire and ambulance emergencies. Centre Hall Borough and Potter Township have been added to the system. The number is 234-0234.

The number is also to be used by residents of State College, and Ferguson, College, Harris and Patton townships.

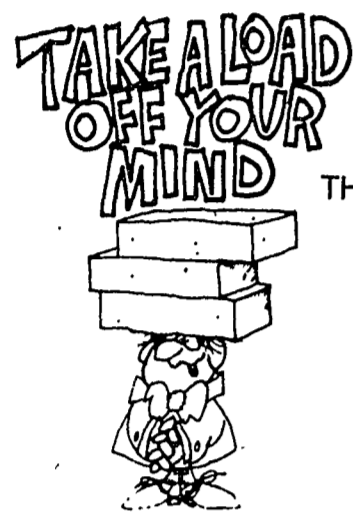

Students place in pageant

Two University students were among the top five finalists in Monday's Miss Pennsylvania-USA pageant in Greensburg.

Nancy Sedlak, a 23-year-old graduate student, finished as the first runner-up. She is from Seven Hills, Ohio, and was entered in the pageant as Miss Centre County.

Mary Engel, a 21-year-old business administration major from Williamsport, also finished in the top five. She was voted Miss Penn State last year.

Maureen Starinsky, a state police officer from Washington, won the pageant and will represent the state in the Miss USA pageant April 30 in Biloxi, Miss. Ninety-two women participated in the pageant.
