Decker said yesterday that applications received by the college represent only a portion of the forms given out to students and that he is expecting more entrance requests after final grades are given out at the conclusion of the term.

He said he expects to receive about 700 applications from Commonwealth campus students before the beginning of fall term, in addition to the University Park students. If applications come in as anticipated, the number of students entering the college will probably exceed the estimated 900 seniors graduating cumulative grade point average if they are transferring from within the Penn State system and a 3.0 to gain admittance from another college or university, according to the new enrollment requirements.

New regulations will become effective Spring Term 1980, Decker said. Students will once again be admitted with a 2.0 GPA, but will need a 2.3 GPA to enter a particular major. Also, a student must complete 60 credits of general requirements and 30 credits of designated course requirements before completion of the seventh term.

Because of the expected increase in student enrollment next year, new course enrollment control measures will also be in effect. After student preregistration forms have been evaluated each term, department heads will cut back the overenrolled courses by selecting the students placed in the class sections. Upper level students outside the business majors may be pre-empted for lower term students

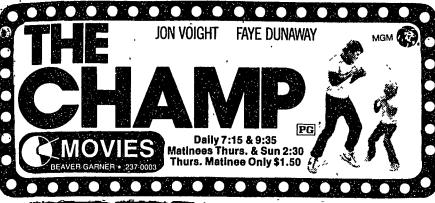

The Daily Collegian Friday, May 11, 1979-19 within the college, Decker said.

Decker said he anticipates advising problems with the new regulations which create a gap between the required entrance GPA and that needed to enter a major. He said the college faculty will have the responsibility to counsel students whose GPA is below the 2.3 requirement.

"We are going to have to rely heavily on the advising function," he said. "I don't know what is going to happen. We may initiate a counseling group to handle the task.' Students in their third, fourth or fifth terms next spring will receive letters recommending that they meet with their advisers should their averages not meet the 2.3 requirement. Decker said these students may be advised to transfer to another university or to the Behrend or Capitol campus.

However, Decker said this policy will leave room for some flexibility.
