

Study links smokers, their kids

By LORRAINE CAPRA
Daily Collegian Staff Writer

Children with parents who smoke are twice as likely to be future smokers than children whose parents do not smoke, according to a recent study by a University assistant professor of health education.

"Experience is a good teacher because the child sees parents and older brothers and sisters smoking," said Robert E. Shute, whose study was sponsored by the American Cancer Society.

Shute's study was conducted among preschool and elementary school children in Harrisburg and Scranton.

To discourage their children from smoking, some parents will even give their child a cigarette, believing that once the child has experienced the sour taste of tobacco he will never go back to smoking again, Shute said.

But as long as the parents themselves continue to smoke, the child will want to imitate them, his study has shown.

Shute found that children of smoking parents start smoking at a very young age and need smoking education programs in elementary schools.

"An awareness of the importance of early education is starting to spread but not in Pennsylvania or in the tobacco states," he said.

One reason for the increase of early smoking programs is the concern of parents. Shute said most parents realize that junior high school may be too late for smoking education, and said some parents even quit smoking so that their children won't smoke.

"That usually doesn't work because it's an excuse," he said. "It's too easy for them to go back to smoking when their children are grown."

Shute has also conducted studies on teenaged smokers. He said 3.3 million teenagers in the 12 to 18 age group can be classified as regular smokers. Of that group, 1.7 million are girls, he said.

D K Phi, we're on top of things . . .

This One is Different

Most computer date match services are for losers. You've heard the pitch—"lonely, divorced, widowed." Who would sign up for a date match like that?

This computer date match is for everybody—jocks, jerks, junkies, Jesus freaks; spare changers, tire changers; modern artists, con artists; smokers, tokers; rah-rah's, rednecks; oversexed, undersexed; AM listeners, FM listeners; TV watchers, bird watchers; fence sitters, baby sitters; penny pinchers, penny pitchers; tacos, matzah balls; anarchists, reactionaries; hippies, narcs; Greeks, dormies, townies; boozers, teetotalers; easy, on the onions, heavy on the ketchup—even you: Mr. and Ms. PSU Public.

Our Computer can quickly search through thousands and find those special types with whom you are most likely to communicate and enjoy dates. There is no easy way we can predict you'll have a dreamdate. But even if your matches don't have that "special pizzazz", the sharing of many interests, attitudes and values will open a channel for a rewarding friendship.

Watch for applications . . . later this week!!

Camp David summit anniversary celebrated

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The United States, Egypt and Israel celebrated the first anniversary of the Camp David summit yesterday, praising the progress of the past year but warning of dangers that lie ahead.

"It's with a great sense of thanksgiving and confidence that I assess what has been done so far and what will be done in the future," Carter said at a White House ceremony marking the signing of Camp David's two frameworks for peace.

Joined by visiting Egyptian and Israeli officials on the south lawn of the White House, Carter said "it is obvious that both countries, both peoples, both leaders are determined this process will be successful."

Israeli Foreign Minister Moshe Dayan said the gap that once divided Israel and Egypt "was wider than the gap that we have between us and the Palestinians when we talk about autonomy."

"That's why I'm hopeful about it," Dayan said.

But Egyptian Vice President Hosni Mubarak sounded a warning note, indirectly criticizing Israel's recent decision to let Jews buy Arab land on the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip.

"We should refrain from any rash act that would jeopardize the prospects of peace at this crucial stage," Mubarak said. "Acts of defiance and negativism should be avoided."

Mubarak and Dayan, flanking Carter, spoke after high representatives of the United States, Israel and Egypt met in the White House Oval Office for about 15 minutes.

The White House said Carter also telephoned Egyptian President Anwar Sadat and Israeli Prime Minister

Officials of the United States, Egypt and Israel, including, from left, Egyptian Vice President Mohammed Hosni Mubarak, U.S. National Security Adviser Zbigniew Brzezinski, President Carter and Israeli Foreign Minister Moshe Dayan, yesterday celebrated the first anniversary of the Camp David summit.

Menachem Begin "to express personally to them his appreciation."

Begin sent Carter a message recalling "the strong debates, the mutual convincing, the difficulties" that led to "a turning point in the annals of the Middle East."

Sadat, in an anniversary message to Carter, said he's confident the Camp David agreements will lead to "a comprehensive peace" that includes "a solution to the Palestinian question in all its aspects."

Carter, obviously aware of the difficulties ahead for Egypt and Israel in negotiating Palestinian self-rule, offered his personal intervention if necessary to break any deadlocks.

"If apparently insurmountable obstacles should be confronted in the negotiating process, then I would be deeply committed to becoming personally involved again," he said.

In a statement issued at the State Department, Secretary of State Cyrus Vance called on "all who seek and cherish peace" to join the Egyptian-Israeli talks toward "full autonomy for the inhabitants of the West Bank and Gaza."

"On this anniversary, all of my colleagues and I join President Carter in committing ourselves to a redoubled effort to build further on the solid foundation laid at Camp David," he said.
