Marchers demand reproductive freedom

Women protest a 'denial of rights'

Margaret Sanger, founder of the birth control movement in the United States.

However, several speakers advocated making contraceptives available to teenage women without parental consent.

For example, Gloria Sackman-Reed, national NOW board member, said, "More than one-half of female and 75 percent of male sexually active adolescents do not use contraception."

"The younger the person, the less the use of contraception," she said.

"About 12,000 girls 14-years-old and younger gave birth in 1977 and the number is increasing. Who pays the price for not having access to birth control when the doctor says 'No, I will not write you a prescription for contraceptives — you are too young and you are not married?'"

"Women and girls pay the price," she said.

She said recent abortion bills have restricted lower class access to abortion and have increased the dangers of unsanctioned surgery.

"This is clearly discriminatory," she said. "I call for a re-order of priorities and purpose to put preventative measures at the top of our agenda."

The rally was also held in conjunction with NOW's plan to propose a package of reproductive rights bills to state legislatures and Congress, White said.

Jean Marshall Clarke, NOW reproductive rights aide, said, "We must make the politicians, the legislators, the judges, our neighbors, friends and families aware of the personal struggle each of us has waged in gaining control over our reproductive lives."

"We must speak out about abortions, about our birth control problem and about our desperation at unwanted pregnancies," she said.

Stealing a phone call isn't a game.

Most students play by the rules when placing a long distance call. They take advantage of bargain rates and make their calls during the discount periods. If you're not sure when you can call at discount rates, check your phone book.

A few students think it's O.K. to break the rules by stealing their telephone calls. They're not beating the system, they're taking advantage of all of us, because it drives up the cost of providing telephone service.

Students who break the rules also run the risk of paying a large fine. Spending time in jail. And getting themselves a permanent police record.

It's just not worth it!
