

Green succeeds Rizzo as mayor

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Democrat William J. Green was elected mayor of the nation's fourth largest city yesterday, succeeding Frank Rizzo and keeping intact a string of Democratic mayoral victories that stretch back to the Korean War.

Green, a former congressman with close ties to the Kennedy clan, defeated Republican David Marston and Lucien Blackwell, a black independent who ran on the Consumer Party ticket.

Philadelphia hasn't elected a GOP mayor since 1947. And Marston, the former prosecutor who tangled with the White House over the political spoils system, was badly outgunned in his attempt to snap a tradition in a town where three fourths of the one million registered voters are Democrats.

Blackwell became the second black ever to mount a serious challenge here for mayor. A late start and lack of funds helped cut him down.

With 29 percent of the ballots counted, Green had 80,916 votes, Marston 47,375 and Blackwell 22,250. Socialist Workers candidate Nora Danielson was way back and fading.

Rizzo, a colorful ruler for almost a decade, was forced to sit this one out by a city charter that limits the mayor to two consecutive terms. He tried to change the charter at the polls last fall so he could run again, but was soundly rebuffed.

"It's the dumbest campaign I've ever seen," the former police commissioner snorted this summer. "An awful choice. Between them, if you scrambled their brains, you still couldn't get a half wit. I'll vote and make a few stops, but I'm not talking," a subdued Rizzo told a reporter yesterday.

In the city controller's race, Republican Jim Fitzgerald faced Democrat Thomas Leonard, the incumbent register of will and a Rizzo supporter, and Consumer Party nominee Lee Frissell. Fitzgerald is a former assistant district attorney.

Also at stake were all 17 City Council seats, as well as the offices of register of will, sheriff and clerk of quarter sessions.

Green, who served in Congress six terms, got into the mayor's race early, assembling an awesome machine that boasted a $2 million war chest and was fine-tuned by Dave Garth, one of the country's top political strategists.

Going into the race, Green was considered the longtime darling of the party's anti-Rizzo liberal elite. But along the way he picked up the support of most of the old-fashioned patronage politicians, who scurried into his corner as Rizzo's power ebbed.

Carter, Kennedy accept Iowa debate

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Carter and Sen. Edward Kennedy yesterday agreed to debate in the key political state of Iowa, setting up an early confrontation in their struggle for the Democratic presidential nomination.

Kenney, who is scheduled to formally announce today in his hometown of Boston his challenge of Carter, said of the Iowa debate: "I look forward to it."

The White House announcement said: "The Des Moines Register and Tribune had invited us to appear on the same platform on the first or second week in January."

"The debate will hopefully force the campaign into dealing with specific questions and specific issues at the beginning of the campaign year," the official said.

"The president was particularly interested in this because he felt it would deal with an issue that is normally neglected in a campaign—agriculture," he said.

Brown tomorrow will formally announce he is running against Carter and Kennedy for the Democratic nomination. He has not been active in Iowa and James Gannon, executive editor of the newspaper, indicated this was why the governor was not invited.

"These are the two candidates who are actively campaigning in Iowa," Gannon said of Carter and Kennedy. Officials said there will be two local reporters and two national reporters on the panel questioning Carter and Kennedy, with questions to be accepted from people in the audience.

Gifts to PSU double since '74

By DIANASIMS
Daily Collegian Staff Writer

Annual contributions to the University have more than doubled since 1974 because of more intensive fund-raising methods, George Moellenbrock Jr., director of annual giving, said.

The contributions from alumni and friends have increased from $5 million to $10.3 million annually, he said. Private contributions are becoming increasingly important as a way to offset the rising cost of education and the leveling off of state support, Moellenbrock said.

Although private contributions have not been dependent upon in the past when drawing up the University budget, Moellenbrock said it is getting to the point where private support is significant. Student fees and state appropriations make up the "bread and butter money" which accounts for basic operating expenses, he said.

"Private contributions make the difference between a mediocre program and a quality one," he said.

The proposed Plan for the '80s calls for a drive to double contributions from private sources by 1985. It also recommends that these contributions continue to be used for programs for which state appropriations cannot be obtained.

The Office of Gifts and Endowments, which accepts and solicits contributions from alumni and friends, has three major projects that attempt to maximize private support, Moellenbrock said.

The annual fund-raising drive, which runs from September until June, attempts to reach all alumni by mail or phone.

Contributors can specifically direct money to a project such as the libraries, colleges, the Hershey Medical Center or scholarships. Contributions can also be unrestricted and used where the University sees the need, Moellenbrock said.

The major gifts project seeks to elicit support for specific major projects such as the art museum, the indoor sports complex or endowed scholarships and fellowships.

The third was money is raised is through the receipt of deferred gifts or contributions that have been directed to the University through a will.

In conjunction with the Office of Gifts and Endowments, other organizations seek contributions from alumni and friends. Among them are the alumni associations of the individual colleges, the Nittany Lion Club and the Penn State Fund Council.

Peter L. Hagen, administrative assistant in the College of the Liberal Arts, said that alumni contributions were used to build the anthropology museum in Sparks. Alumni contributions pay entirely for the annual Career Day for liberal arts students, he said.

The Nittany Lion Club was established to solicit private support for the athletic program by contributing to the Levi Lamb Fund, according to James Tarman, president of the Nittany Lion Club and assistant athletic director. This grant-in-aid program benefits athletes from every sport at the University. Contributors who donate $50 or more are eligible for preferred seating at home football if they have season tickets, he said.
