

Cancer society revises checkup suggestions

WASHINGTON (UPI)—The American Cancer Society yesterday revised its recommendations for cancer checkups, reducing in some cases the frequency of suggested tests aimed at detecting malignancies in their earliest, most-treatable stages.

The new recommendations represent a major change in policy for the leading non-government anti-cancer organization.

The checkup changes, the first since the society began issuing such recommendations in the 1950s, take into account the latest information on the risks, costs and effectiveness of various cancer detection techniques.

The new advice no longer recommends annual chest X-rays for symptomless smokers and other high-risk individuals over age 40, and reduces the recommendation for an annual Pap test for cervical cancer to every three years for low-risk women over 20.

It also cuts back the frequency of recommended sigmoidoscopic exams for colon cancer from annual tests for use over 50. Recommendations for pelvic exams for women over 40 were cut back from annually to once every three years.

Recommendations remained the same for standard monthly breast self-examination for women over 20, and annual digital rectal examinations by physicians for men and women over 40.

General checkups were recommended annually for those over 40 to look for cancers of the thyroid, testicles, prostate, ovaries, lymph nodes, oral region and skin. Such exams are advised every three years for men and women between 20 and 40.

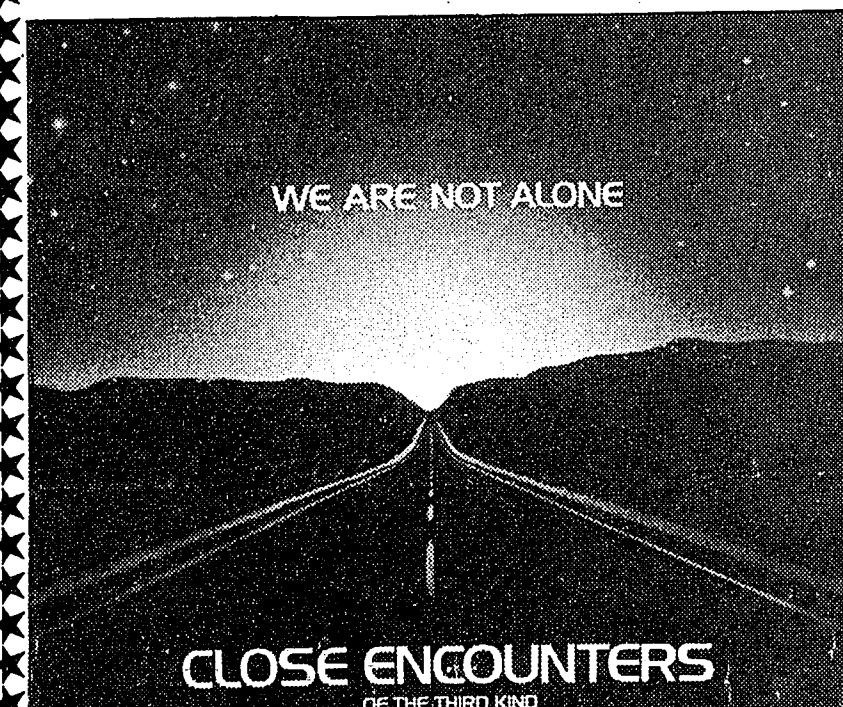

Cancer warning signals include a change in bowel or bladder habits, a sore that does not heal, unusual bleeding, thickening or a lump in the breast or elsewhere, indigestion or difficulty swallowing, obvious change in a wart or mole, and nagging cough or hoarseness.

Here's a summary of the new recommendations for various cancer sites:

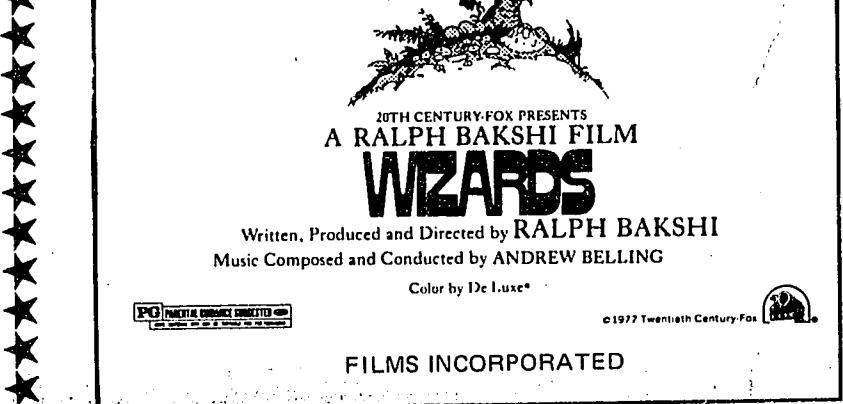

—Colon and rectum: sigmoidoscopic exams at 3-to 5-year intervals for those over 50, provided negative exams have been recorded for two consecutive years. An annual test for blood traces in the stool for those over 50. Digital rectal examinations annually for those over 40.

—Cervix: Pap tests at least every three years, one two negative tests have been performed a year apart, for women over 20, and those sexually ac-

'Red sweat' cases traced to flaking paint on vests

MIAMI (UPI)—Eastern Airlines flight attendant Jeri Maxwell said yesterday she never had "red sweat" or "red dots" but worried about it while flying on Eastern's A-300 air buses.

Flight attendant Ann Landrum, who did, said it never worried her.

Eastern's flight medicine director, Dr. David P. Millet, announced Wednesday the 170 cases of red sweat and red dots reported by 45 Eastern flight attendants since January had been traced to flaking red paint on demonstration life vests.

The red letters spelled out "Demo Only" to warn the vests were to be used only to instruct passengers in survival techniques and not in an actual emergency.

"I was somewhat apprehensive, to the degree that I didn't realize what was creating the problem," said Maxwell, a Petersburg, Fla., native now in her sixth year of flying for Eastern.

Asked if she was fully satisfied with Eastern's explanation of the phenomena, she said, "At this point, I am. I don't have any reason to doubt their findings."

Landrum, a Tompkinsville, Ky., native in her 13th year with Eastern, said she experienced the red dot phenomena during an A-300 flight last January.

"We were standing in the galley, talking and joking about it. I saw three little dots on my forehead. They looked like little pin pricks. I wasn't concerned about it, I thought it was kind of a joke."

"I didn't report it, and I wouldn't have noticed it if it hadn't been brought up and we weren't looking for it. Nobody got upset about it. There are always rumors going around the airlines about one thing or another and you get accustomed to the stories," she said.

All the same, Miss Landrum, is relieved, too. But for a slightly different reason.
