Panel discusses nuclear power

Daily Collegian Staff Writer Nuclear waste disposal, conservation of resources and nuclear proliferation were all topics of an open informal discussion of promises and dangers of nuclear energy held vesterday at the Wesley Foundation. Panelists for the discussion, cosponsored by Eco-Action and Thinking About War, included Craig Bohren, assistant professor o meteorology; Chauncey Kepford, legal director of the Environmental Coalition on Nuclear Power and Samuel Levine, director of the University's Breazeale Reactor.

Levine gave the high price of oil, an increasing world population and the need for a realistic form of energy as basic reasons why the world should accept nuclear energy. The Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries has complete
